Dublin Blast Kills U.K. Envoy, Woman

Wreckage of car lies in crater caused by today's blast

Times News Services

DUBLIN — British ambassador Christopher Ewart-Biggs and a woman secretary to a top British official in Northern Ireland were killed today when a land mine blew up the ambassador's car.

Brian Cubbon, the visiting official from Belfast, was critically injured.

A chauffeur was also injured and reported in critical condition from the blast that hit the car as it came out of the gates of the ambassador's mansion on the outskirts of Dublin.

At a special Dublin cabinet meeting following the murders, Prime Minister Liam Cosgrove authorized a $36,000 reward for information leading to the killers.

Ewart-Biggs, 54, new to his post here, is believed to be the first British official killed in the Irish republic since the Irish war of independence in the early 1920s.

The British embassy in Dublin was burned four years ago by a mob enraged when British paratroopers killed 13 unarmed civilians during a demonstration in Northern Ireland.

Ewart-Biggs went to Dublin as Britain's new ambassador July 8 to end the British diplomatic hibernation in the city.

The British government had maintained a low profile here since the embassy was burned.

But Ewart-Biggs' flair and aristocratic bearing immediately caught the imagination of Irish newspapers, who were not sure whether he was a genuine eccentric or an intelligence expert.

The new ambassador called a group of Irish and British political correspondents to his home Tuesday to declare the era of "British diplomatic hibernation" in Dublin was over.

He added pointedly that the black monocle he wore was to cover the loss of his right eye at the battle of El Alamein in the Second World War.

A caricature of him created from a cross between a P. G. Wodehouse character and Rudyard Kipling "just bloody well won't wash at all," he said.

The Irish Republican Army immediately condemned the killings, but Irish Foreign Minister Garret Fitzgerald said "the most likely suspects (in the killings) would be the provisional IRA or a group of that type."

A police spokesman said the mine apparently was detonated by remote control as the car passed over the device.

Mars Really Is Red

The picture transmitted by the Viking 1 lander showed the rock-littered surface to be a brownish-red color.

Dr. Thomas Mutch, head of the Viking surface photography team, said as the picture flashed on television sets at the Jet Propulsion Laboratory here:

"It's a very exciting thing to see this definite reddish coloration of the surface.

"This is quite surprisingly terrestial-like—a pleasant scene, definitely not the colors of the moon."

The robot spacecraft has detected nitrogen and argon gases in the atmosphere of the Red planet in sufficient abundance to make scientists more optimistic that life might flourish there, the project's directors said today.

While not providing any evidence of life, past or future, the discovery by Viking 1 as it descended toward Tuesday's Mars landing suggest that Mars had a denser, more life-nurturing environment in the past.

Together with Viking's findings from orbit that water once flowed in rivers on the planet, the discovery of nitrogen means that all the essential factors for life might have been present at some time, project scientist Dr. Gerald Soffen said at a news briefing early today.

"The "stewpot' was there to do the kind of organic chemistry required for biogenesis (synthesis) of living organisms," said Soffen. "Whether it took place or not we don't know."

From the abundance of argon, it can be deduced that nitrogen must have been present early in the planet's history, Dr. Michael McElroy of Harvard University told a news conference.

CANCEL JOBS LOST

About 300 jobs will be lost as a result of a decision by the government-owned Canadian Cellulose Company Ltd. to phase out its Prince Rupert sulphite pulp plant.

The decision was announced today by Ronald Gross, president and chief executive officer of the firm.

The phase-out will occur in October.

The company previously announced it will invest $100 million to modify its Prince Rupert plant from the sulphite process to the kraft process.

"The phase-out is an essential step to enable the mill to be modified to the kraft production," Gross said.

The only question, he said, was how long the company could continue to operate the mill as a sulphite plant.

Gross said an immediate consequence of the phase-out is that there would no longer be jobs for about 300 employees of the mill's 975-strong work force.

While some new jobs will be created when the kraft operation starts, the over-all manpower requirements will be less, he said.

The president also announced that a "comprehensive assistance plan" has been developed for the people who will lose their jobs.

LOCKHEED DEAL SIGNED

OTTAWA (CP) — The government signed a $1-billion deal with Lockheed Aircraft Corp. today to acquire 18 Auroras—formerly known as the Orion — which Defence Minister James Richardson said will be the best anti-submarine aircraft in the world.

The deal is the largest single peacetime military contract ever signed by Canada and is the largest international deal ever put together by Lockheed.

It calls for deliveries of the Auroras with their special-for-Canada electronic package by March 1981, replacing outdated Argus aircraft that the country has been using for years.

The contract was signed by supply Minister Jean-Pierre Goyer for Canada and Robert Haack, chairman of the board for Lockheed, in a brief ceremony.

Later, Defence Minister James Richardson read a statement at a news conference, which said:

"I believe that in future years all Canadians, and particularly members of the Canadian Armed Forces, will be proud and reassured to know that Aurora, the best-long-range patrol aircraft in the world, will be guarding the sea approaches to Canada and patrolling our northern skies."

Because the aircraft became a distinctly Canadian creation the minister named it Aurora, after the northern lights.

The contract provides $697 million for the aircraft itself and much of its ground systems. Another $334.7 million goes to other costs, including federal sales tax.

Renewed Townships Riot Leaves Two Africans Dead

JOHANNESBURG (AP) — Two black men were killed and more than 20 other persons injured in riots in three black South African townships Tuesday night. Police said the situation was calm today.

The disturbances broke out as schools closed by black rioters last month were to reopen. Posters carried by the rioters Tuesday said: "We are fighting for our black brothers and sisters who died in Soweto."

At least 176 persons, nearly all black, died in those riots, which began in the huge black township of Soweto, outside Johannesburg.

Police rushed Tuesday night to Lynnville township, near Witbank, 70 miles east of Pretoria, where 3,000 black youths attacked whites, Indians and persons of mixed race.

Police said nine blacks were injured, four by bullets, when officers moved in to stop the rioting. An 18-year-old black youth was found shot dead in a beer hall and a second black youth was killed by the driver of a vehicle trying to get through a crowd of blacks.

Police also reported that attempts were made to burn black schools in at least three townships. Two fires were put out quickly but Bethanie school near Marikana was badly damaged.

Meanwhile, in Rhodesia, two grenade blasts in the centre of Salisbury have brought home to metropolitan Rhodesians the guerrilla war until now raging only on the borders.

Police would not say that the blasts, which occurred two minutes apart at a crowded restaurant and a nightclub a mile away, were definitely the work of guerrillas. But a senior police official said they could certainly be called terrorism.

The fear in Salisbury today was that this might mark the start of urban guerrilla warfare.

Hydro Row Escalation Will Hit Public—Union

B.C. Hydro customers will soon feel the effects of the crown corporation's labor dispute, a union spokesman warned today.

"It's safe to say that the dispute has accelerated to the point where we don't see any way that inconvenience to the public is going to be avoided," said Fred Trotter, president of Local 378 Office and Technical Employees Union.

Hydro spokesmen said today a lockout policy launched Tuesday is aimed at those 250 or so employees who participated in selective strike action during the last two weeks.

But initial reports to OTEU offices in Vancouver today, said Trotter, indicate "other groups who have not participated in strike action at all have been locked out."

The union's first notice of the company's intent he said came when 36 employees tried to return to work Tuesday but were met with lockout notice. At 4 p.m. other groups who had not participated in the strike activity including 1975, in customer accounting were informed they were locked out.

Trotter said union strike activity was kept to areas of administration—"things between ourselves and them"—not the customer service of gas or electricity.

"But the attitude (in face of the lockout) is changed." The decision will made on greater escalation of strikes after "we see the dimensions of the lockout activity," he said.

If any major disruption of electricity service did occur it is likely the provincial government could use its new essential services legislation to order a 40-day cooling off period.

Labor Minister Allan Williams, when he introduced the amendments to the Labor Code this spring said the bill could be used in disputes that proved harmful to the public's health and safety.

FIVE MARGUERITE CREW SUSPENDED

By LIZ HUGHES

Times Staff

Five employees of the provincially-owned ferry Princess Marguerite have been suspended pending an investigation of discrepancies in money taken in from liquor sales on the ship.

It is not known how much money is involved and Art Elworthy, general manager of the B.C. Steamship Co., which operates the Marguerite, refused comment on the case until a hearing today in Victoria is over.

The hearing will decide whether the five employees will be suspended, fired or allowed to continue in their jobs.

The five are members of the Brotherhood of Railway, Airline and Steamship Clerks (BRAC), the union representing non-maritime employees of the Marguerite.

BRAC general chairman Ron Welch is in Victoria today attending the hearing.

Under the union contract employees cannot be fired until after a hearing is held. They are considered to be "held out of service" pending the outcome of the hearing.

The union apparently held a meeting Tuesday in the Alcazar Hotel in Vancouver where it decided at least to attend the hearing.

B.C. Steamship Co. superintendent of passenger services Dave Price also refused comment on the hearing saying he didn't want to jeopardize "either their case or ours."

He said he expected the hearing to be wrapped up later today.

LONG-DISTANCE . . . IT SURE IS

VANCOUVER (CP) A provincial government employee got a sneak preview Tuesday of B.C. Tel's Overseas Direct Dialing Service when he tried to phone Victoria — and missed by 7,300 miles.

Walter Muller, an employee of the Vancouver Resources Board said he was dialing a local number that should have connected him directly with a government switchboard in Victoria but instead, got a Melbourne, Australia, woman out of bed at about 5 a.m. Melbourne time.

"Halfway through dialing I thought that something went wrong so I cut the connection," said Muller. "I thought I had a clear line but I guess I didn't.

"I dialed the number again. It turned out I got a woman in Melbourne. I asked her her number; it was similar to what I dialed but different."

After checking the 1976 Vancouver phone book, which explains that direct dialing to selected overseas countries goes into effect Sept. 7, he tried a number in Japan — and got a recorded message, in Japanese.

But when he phoned the operator to make sure he didn't get billed for the Melbourne call — which would cost about $9 — he said an operator told him: "Don't worry; you can't dial overseas; it's impossible."

Jim MacInnes, B.C. Tel spokesman, confirmed, however, that several overseas lines have been installed and that it was possible for Muller to reach an Australian number.

Tunisia Joins Games' Boycott

Times News Services

Tunisia has withdrawn from the Olympic Games, the government announced in Tunis today.

Only two African countries — Senegal and Ivory Coast — now remain in the Games. On Tuesday Egypt and Morocco announced they were out, for an unofficial total of boycotting nations of 31.

The pullouts hit 11 of the 21 sports in the Games of the 21st Olympiad.

The African and Arab countries, along with Guyana in South America, called the boycott in an attempt to force withdrawal of New Zealand, which allowed one of its rugby teams to tour South Africa, under Olympic suspension because of its apartheid policies.

Kenya's boycott forced cancellation of five field hockey matches and nine of 24 soccer games were dropped after Nigeria, Zambia and Ghana withdrew.

Observers say the boycott's main impact will not be felt until track and field events begin Friday.

Meanwhile in Johannesburg it was announced that a team of U.S. women gymnasts taking part in the Olympics will visit South Africa after the Games.

The U.S. team will include three gymnasts who have competed in South Africa before. They will take in events at Bloemfontein July 31 and at Johannesburg August 7, a spokesman said.

Immediately after the series, the South African gymnasts will leave for Taiwan for a series of tournaments, the spokesman said.

News of the Tunisian pullout was a surprise.

Mohamed Mzali, minister of education and president of the Tunisian National Olympic Committee, said in Montreal Tuesday that Tunisia had no reason for joining African countries in a boycott of the Games in protest over a tour of South Africa by a rugby team from New Zealand.

Swim Team Disqualified

MONTREAL (CP) — Canada's men's 200-metre freestyle relay team was disqualified today after finishing with a Canadian record time behind the world-record setting American team in Olympic swimming competition.

The disqualification came after Stephen Pickell was ruled to have left the blocks too early when he took over on the third leg from Bill Sawchuck of Thunder Bay, Ont.

The United States team of Doug Northway, Tim Shaw, Mike Bruner and Bruce Furniss won the heat in a world record time of seven minutes, 30.33 seconds. An American team last year set the previous mark of 7:30.54.

RCMP Man Quits . . . Job Futile

NORTH VANCOUVER (CP) —Blasting "bleeding hearts" in the federal justice department, Staff Sgt. Fred Bodnaruk, a 25-year RCMP veteran and prominent B.C. policeman, announced Tuesday he was leaving the force.

Bodnaruk, 45, said he was leaving the RCMP 10 years before normal retirement because leniency in the justice system was making his job futile and making the protection of the public impossible.

"Suddenly I realized the government seems to be irresponsible in the policies they are bringing in — I can see it's all a bunch of hogwash," said the veteran murder investigator.

BODNARUK

"There are just too many bleeding hearts in that (justice) department."

He said liberalization of the justice system will lead to more murders, sex crimes and other violence and if the government, as a result, isn't forced by public pressure to return the death penalty within 10 years, "people will take over justice for themselves — I'm sure of it."

Bodnaruk said he has taken part in at least 25 murder investigations, seven of them sex-slayings, and linked the rape-murders of many B.C. women in the past two years to more lenient parole procedures.

"The attitude now is because you rape a girl then kill her, you can get away with it because she won't talk if you kill her. The parole board is letting these people out too early.

"I have talked to some of these criminals and they think justice as it is now is a laugh."

Bodnaruk said he expected drug-related, professional killings would increase in the future because of recent removal of the death penalty. He said Prime Minister Trudeau was partially to blame for the condition of the justice system because he helped introduce the Bail Reform Act and supported abolition of capital punishment.

He also blamed the judiciary, saying that "some judges are just plain, damn lenient, and some young judges don't believe in jail terms of any kind."

"There should be some common standard of judgment — or a definite detention period. We have people coming to court charged with six or 10 offences because they came in first with one charge and then committed other crimes while awaiting trial.

"Somebody in this country has to have guts enough to say enough is enough — and start protecting the taxpayer," Bodnaruk said.

His decision to leave the RCMP followed the sex-slaying of a 16-year-old North Vancouver girl Saturday. No suspects have been arrested in the case.

Bodnaruk said he plans to take some time off before looking for a job in "the law and order or security field."

GOLD RALLIES

BRUSSELS (UPI) — Gold staged a rally in European bullion markets today, halting a four-day slide that at one point cut its value by $16. the U.S. dollar opened mixed. The metal opened today at $109, up $2 in London and $2.25 in Zurich. It was fixed in London at $110.

They're Back!

The tourists are starting to arrive but it may be a little early for wild rejoicing, B.C. Ferries assistant traffic manager Bill Bouchard said today.

There were 114,590 passengers on the Tsawwassen-Swartz Bay ferry run during the second week in July, down only 2.29 per cent from the same week last year. However, vehicle traffic was down 23 per cent.

"It is a hopeful sign but the passenger count is so out of proportion that there may have been an unusually high number of charter bus passengers carried in that week.

"There is no question the traffic is increasing but it is not yet back to last year's level."

In the first week of June, passenger traffic was down 31 per cent from the corresponding 1975 period.

In the second week it was down 26 per cent and in the third week down an identical 26 per cent. In the fourth week it was down 23 per cent.

In the first week of July it was down 20 per cent and in the second week down slightly over 24 per cent.

A similar trend was evident in vehicle totals. The week-by-week decline in June was 40 per cent, 34 per cent, 32 per cent, 28 per cent.

In the first week of July the total number of vehicles was down 26 per cent from the same week in 1975. In the second week of July it was down 23 per cent.

Bouchard said a spot check on vehicles shows that many of the vehicles starting to arrive are from out-of-province.

The number of out-of-province recreational vehicles, for example, is twice as high as it was in the third week in June. This is not unusual but it indicates the tourists are beginning to arrive at last, Bouchard said.

While the route between Victoria and Vancouver showed a marked improvement, traffic between Nanaimo and the mainland continues to be at a low level.

In the first week of July passenger traffic was down 19 per cent from the same week in 1975. In the second week it was even worse, down 24 per cent.

The number of vehicles carried on the Naniamo-Horseshoe Bay run was down 27 per cent in the second week of July.

Family Way Was the Wrong Way

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — A clinic that diagnosed men as pregnant was ordered to improve its procedures.

Judge Norman Dowds Tuesday ordered the Phoenix Family Medical Clinic of Long Beach to stop telling women they are pregnant unless the test was supervised by a physician or registered nurse.

Eight female undercover agents went to the clinic, investigators said, including four who substituted male urine for their own and two who had undergone hysterectomies and could not possibly be pregnant.

Two of the four male urine samples were diagnosed as coming from pregnant women, and both the hysterectomy cases were told they were pregnant, the complaint said.

The women said they were then offered abortions for $150.

Oakalla Called Tragedy

BURNABY (CP) — A group of politicians headed by Public Works Minister Alex Fraser toured the Lower Mainland Regional Correctional Centre (Oakalla) Tuesday and were disgusted by the conditions they saw.

Burnaby Mayor Tom Constable later described the prison in his municipality neighboring Vancouver as "the most depressing place you could visualize."

Social Credit member of the legislature for Burnaby-Edmonds, Ray Loewen, called it "a tragedy to humanity," while Elwood Veitch, Socred member for the riding (Burnaby-Willingdon), added: "We'd love to see it the hell out of there."

The group, accompanied by the deputy public works minister George Giles, and Fraser's executive assistant, Don Larsen, were given a two-hour tour of the 64-year-old institution.

It stands on a 158-acre site designated eventually to be a municipal park. Oakalla holds about 700 prisoners.

"It's so backward and antiquated that it's pathetic," said Bill Baker, a senior corrections officer in charge of the west wing, where most accused persons on remand are held.

"Some persons on remand don't deserve to be here."

Baker was critical of the remand cells and facilities.

"In the indoor recreation area, there's nothing for them to do," he said, "unless they're good readers or listeners. They just sit and try to create something for diversion.

"It's the same thing, day in and day out, month in and month out. The only thing that changes is the faces."

The average stay of an inmate on remand in the 257-bed unit is about six weeks, he said, although some awaiting high court trial could remain as long as a year.

Baker said in one tier of cells, as many as 38 inmates share one shower and two sinks.

The former NDP government had promised to phase Oakalla out and tear it down once new facilities were ready, but so far, the Social Credit administration has made no firm commitments on establishing new penal institutions.

employees were effected by the lockout. About 12 employees in the meter reading and cashier departments participated in strike activity and they will be met with lockout notice if they return, he said.

Trotter said the union had co-operated in the recent emergency situation when hydro was disrupted to Vancouver Island. "If we had taken advantage of the situation we could have disrupted service for a considerable period, but instead we even removed picket lines."

Lockout tactics will expand further today, said Dave Robertson a company spokesman, affecting 250 to 300 employees above the 200 members of the union's 3,500 member bargaining unit affected Tuesday.

Robertson said the company's selective lockout will attempt to "minimize inconvenience to the public," while at the same time "apply pressure to the union members to accept the terms for an agreement that Hydro has offered the union."

He said the company has no intention of shutting down its operations and the lockouts would be only selective in various parts of the province.

The union began work disruptions, including picket action, on a selective basis July 6 after it served strike notice on the company.

Negotiations between the two sides broke down in mid-June when mediator Charles Stewart reported to the minister of labor that he could not bring the two parties together.

One problem in negotiations, said Robertson, was the union's insistence that the new agreement begin June 1, 1975. It asked for a six per cent increase retroactive to that date and 13 per cent more as of April 1 this year.

The company however wants the new agreement to take effect April 1, and has offered an eight per cent wage increase.

Building Strike Crisis Talks On

VANCOUVER (CP) — A full-scale negotiating meeting aimed at ending the lengthy construction industry strike-lockout was being held today at the University of British Columbia.

All 15 building trades unions except the cement masons were expected to attend the meeting although it was not known whether the negotiations would be held in the same room.

To date, the eight mechanical trades union and the seven basic trades union have kept their talks with the construction labor relations association separate.

The talks were stalled last week over a dispute on electrical linemen's contracts, but got back into gear Thursday after the issue was resolved.

Since then, the CLRA has been meeting with various unions to settle individual trade issues.

Today's meeting was expected to deal with common trade issues, and possibly a monetary package.

The cement masons will not attend the meeting because of what business agent Frank Stevens has said are "under-the-table" deals between the CLRA and certain unions.

City Yacht Comes 2nd

Victoria's only entry in the Maui yacht race has placed second, officials declared Tuesday.

Lucifer, a 41-foot sloop skippered by Al Nelson, had arrived sixth in elasped time in the 2,308-mile race which began from Victoria July 3.

Race Passage, a 44-foot sloop, from Bremerton, Wash, was declared over-all winner. Terna III, a 39-foot West Vancouver sloop, was third in corrected time.

Thirty-two boats began the race and by Tuesday night, eight had finished with 11 more due today and Thursday.

Jordan River Convict Runs

Sooke RCMP are searching for a 28-year-old prisoner reported missing from the Jordan River Correction Camp.

John Sanford, who disappeared early today, is six-feet four inches tall, weighs 170 pounds and has brown hair, hazel eyes, a moustache and beard.

He was sentenced to the camp located about 6½ miles west of Jordan River for a number of traffic violations.

A SICK CALL FOR COMMONS

LONDON (UPI) — The Labor government drafted its sick and ailing lawmakers into Parliament Tuesday night to ensure it would not lose five critical Commons votes.

The government, which nominally has an over-all majority of two in the lower house, won all five by majorities ranging from 17 to six votes.

A first-aid station was set up in the Commons basement with a nurse on hand.

Into it were wheeled Laborites Sir Alfred Broughton, 73, suffering from respiratory trouble; Alex Lyon, 44, recovering from gall bladder surgery, and Alec Jones, 55, recovering from a recent heart attack.

Conservative Janet Fooks, suffering from mumps, sat in a car outside.

None of them actually had to vote. Their presence in the vicinity of Parliament was sufficient.

Two other sick Laborite lawmakers were unable to show up at all. William Molloy, 57, who recently underwent surgery for a kidney stone, and Frank McElhone, 47, victim of back trouble, were not allowed to leave their hospital beds.

Black Boycott Fears For Edmonton Games

EDMONTON (CP) — The Commonwealth Games federation might consider barring New Zealand from the 1978 commonwealth games in Edmonton, according to Dr. Maury van Vliet, president of the Commonwealth Games foundation.

In a telephone interview from Montreal, he said exclusing New Zealand to avoid a boycott by African and Caribbean members of the commonwealth "is the sort of thing I'll discuss with Sir Alexander (Ross, federation chairman) when I get home and things have a chance to settle down."

Dr. van Vliet said he had "casual conversations" with representatives of African nations since a Commonwealth Games meeting in Montreal last week.

"No one is in a position to make an official statement on the Commonwealth Games," he said.

"They'll have to consult with their governments when they get home."

He said Nigerian and Kenyan representatives said "they hoped to be there, but they'd have to go home and review the situation."

Jean-Claude Ganga, secretary-general of the Supreme Council for Sport in Africa, said in Montreal that Edmonton organizers can solve the problem simply by excluding New Zealand from the Commonwealth Games.

Contacted at his home in London, Eng., Sir Alexander said "It's a little early" to worry about 1978 problems now.

There is nothing in the federation constitution about contact with South Africa, he said, adding it is still too early to consider changing the constitution.

Boat Sinking Mystery—Crew

The crew of the ill-fated Hilmar B arrived today in Victoria completely baffled by the mystery sinking of their 110-foot steel hull fishboat 185 miles west of Tofino Monday.

"One moment we were cruising along real good," said the vessel's captain Jim Wylie, 38. "All of a sudden she took a list to port, rolled on its side and didn't come back."

The fishboat, built two years ago and the pride of a fleet owned by E. H. Bendiksen of Seattle, sank within 20 minutes, Wylie said.

He estimated the boat was worth $1 million.

Wylie, his nephew, Billy Wylie, 22, engineer Randy Hawkinson, 22, all from the Seattle area and crewman David Leite of Portugal, got off the stricken vessel safely and took to an eight-man inflatable liferaft after issuing a distress signal shortly after 4 p.m.

Winds were blowing steadily from the south at 25 knots and seas were running 12 to 15-foot waves at the time.

Wylie said the boat "just lay on its side and wouldn't roll back." Water poured in filling the ballast hold, the weight crushing the vessel deeper and deeper into the sea.

He said the whole thing happened "pretty quick."

Once aboard the liferaft they switched on an electronic locator transmitter which enabled the searching aircraft to home in on them.

Hawkinson said all he could think about was "first how did we get in this mess and second how are we going to get out of it with our lives."

They were spotted by a Canadian Forces Argus aircraft a few hours later, picked up by the Japanese freighter Shinyo Maru a little after 11 p.m. and transferred to HMCS Gatineau just before midnight.

The men were tired but in good shape when they left the Gatineau in Esquimalt at 8:30 a.m.

Wylie said the Hilmar B left Seattle Sunday bound for Alaska to go crab fishing. It carried a full cargo of lumber, sand, cement and other supplies for a cannery at Dutch Harbor.

A Search and Rescue spokesman speculated Tuesday the cargo might have shifted causing the boat to sink but Wylie discounted this as unlikely because the holds were fully loaded.

"There was no room for anything to shift," he said.

They said they were expecting a long ordeal and were surprised when they heard the sound of an aircraft.

They lit a flare to attract its attention, but the Argus had already spotted them.

The aircraft remained overhead illuminating the rescue area with flares until the Shinyo Maru arrived. It was about 40 miles south when the first May Day was issued and 29 miles away when the Argus spotted the men.

The 600-foot freighter cut its engines and drifted beside the liferaft. Bill Wylie clambered up a ladder, the others were hauled up by rope.

The men were given a bath, dry clothes and a hot meal before being taken to the Gatineau which arrived about an hour later.

Food Market Robbed At Knife-Point

Victoria police are searching for two suspects in a knife-point robbery late Tuesday that saw $191 taken from a clerk at Grant's Food and Meat Market.

Susan Manthorpe and her 10-year-old brother were tending the family store at 1022 Cook St. when two men — one armed with a knife — demanded money.

Susan handed over the cash and the men fled.

Police said one lead they are following is the car possibly used by the robbers.

The car is described as a two-door medium-sized North American make, dark green or black and missing both hubcaps on the passenger side.

Still a Pig in a Poke

While Canadians focussed attention on capital punishment, bilingualism and the Olympics another issue smouldered in the bulging grab bag of national concern. That, of course, is the proposed $1 billion expenditure on new long range patrol aircraft. Since the Lockheed Orion deal foundered last May over financing much wheeling and dealing has occurred behind the scenes.

Immediately after the collapse of the Orion deal, government negotiators went back to Boeing for another look at converting its airliners to defence purposes. Given a second chance, the Seattle based company produced a new and lower estimate on modifying the Boeing 707 for an anti-submarine role. Defence negotiators were reported to be enthusiastic about the second initiative. Meanwhile, Defence Minister James Richardson visited Washington where the Americans apparently made it plain they favored the Lockheed deal. While Canada sniffs at world opinion concerning the Olympics, its listens very seriously when the U.S. talks about bilateral trade.

The new Lockheed deal which went to cabinet last Thursday and should be approved today, is essentially the same as the original one; except that the U.S. company now feels it can complete the transaction without $350 million financing from Canadian banks. However, cabinet had second thoughts, apparently about buying a special Canadian version of the Orion which could not be marketed elsewhere. Expensive adaptations would also have to have been made for Canadian purposes. For example, each of the Orion maple leaf versions would have had an extra $20 million tacked on to the basic cost. In terms of the 18-plane deal that would mean an estimated extra outlay of between $350 to $450 million for a configuration incorporating longer range capability and special land surveillance devices. The standard U.S. naval Orion, which it appears Canada is buying under this new deal, is next to useless for Canadian arctic soverignty patrols. With the modified arrangement, some of the sophisticated equipment which would have gone in at the time of construction now won't be installed until an unspecified later date. Perhaps never?

No matter how one views even the revamped Lockheed deal, Ottawa is still purchasing a 25-year-old design, housing aging electronic equipment at a premium price. The alternatives available included the aforementioned Boeing 707 modification of a updated U.S. version of the Orion, now in the planning stages with the American navy. Considering the urgent need for an Argus replacement, another long wait would have been clearly unacceptable to Canada's armed forces or our fretting allies.

But after nearly two years of negotiating, the Lockheed proposal still resembles an old pig in a new poke. Such animals have a habit of grunting throughout their natural life.

Who'd Want It Otherwise?

Elsewhere on this page, Transport Minister Jack Davis drives home the fact — yet again — that B.C. Ferries service is being subsidized. Fares charged to cross Georgia Strait result in revenues amounting to only two-thirds of expenditures, he points out. Thus every motorist who drives his vehicle aboard a ferry to Tsawwassen at Swartz Bay or vice versa is receiving, indirectly, a crisp five dollar bill courtesy the B.C. taxpayer.

"Far from being discriminated against, they are getting first-class treatment," Davis says of us Islanders.

He also repeats an earlier example used by the defenders of the horrendous hike in ferry fares, that the total subsidy of $25 million would "pay all the interest and upkeep charges necessary to build and maintain a two-lane . . . highway from Kamloops to Vancouver."

We don't deny the fact that Vancouver Islanders are getting a subsidy, but that's stretching the analogy out of all recognizable shape. Since when has any motorist ever had to pay toll to drive on any B.C. road.

Why chide Vancouver Island because it gets a subsidy for ferry service? What do you call the $47 million loss suffered by the B.C. Railway in fiscal 1974-75? That was paid out of the provincial treasury — a subsidy to the thinly-populated regions of the interior.

But have you heard of the Socreds sending hectoring letters to Williams Lake or Fort Nelson (or, heaven forbid, actually raising passenger fares or freight rates) telling them to get on the ball and make the BCR "pay as you go?"

Someone familiar with Socred high finance explained the subtle difference to us. The BCR is a development railway, you see, necessary to the economy of the north, so B.C. has to subsidize the line to bring out all the lumber and minerals that provide jobs. B.C. Ferries, on the other hand, is a wasteful, money-losing operation that should be made to "pay as you go."

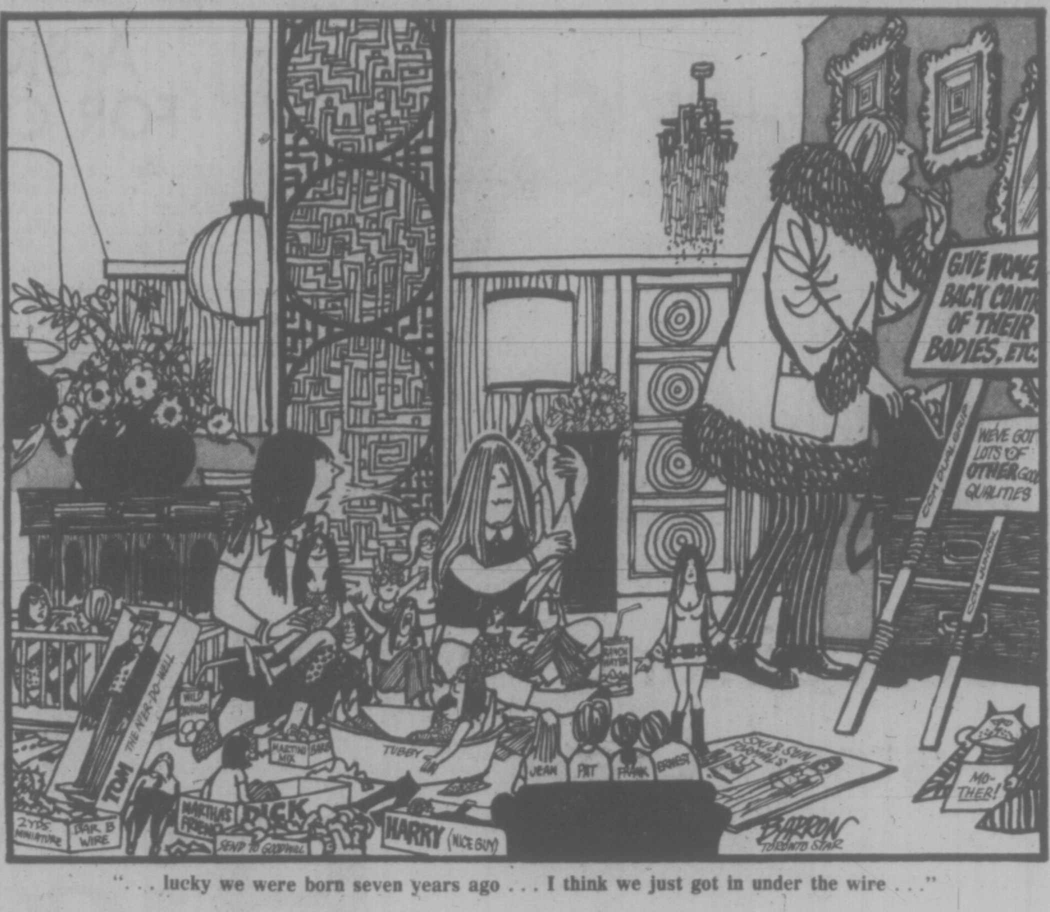
Who would want it otherwise?

Bums Versus Heroes

Victoria Police Chief Jack Gregory's comment that if you capture a criminal without anyone getting hurt you're a hero; if you don't you're a bum, has a ring of truth. But all too often in high speed police chases an innocent person is injured or killed. The latest case involves an 80-year-old man who was struck by an RCMP ghost car, mistakenly in pursuit of another unmarked police car. A year or so ago a Saanich police cruiser answering a call went through a red light with its flasher on colliding with another vehicle in which a woman died.

High speed driving by police officers is inevitable. It is difficult to criticize high speeds when policemen are responding to emergencies such as robberies, riots or accidents. High speed chases are something else altogether. Local police departments say they don't encourage chases, but it is left up to the discretion of individual officers. If some drunk is weaving down the highway at excessive speeds should he be allowed to continue on his dangerous course or should a policeman try to halt him? Allowed to go his merry way, the drunk might wipe out a whole family not to mention himself.

Despite the increasing frequency of innocent deaths because of high speed chases there are times when it is the lesser of two evils. If a maniac is firing at police in the midst of a chase, perhaps it would be better to let him go. Yet there are cases where it is more in the public interest to stop somebody — such as a drunk — even at the risk of a high speed chase. In the end it should be left to the discretion of the individual officer, as long as he keeps in mind that it is better to bring 'em back alive.



". . . lucky we were born seven years ago . . . I think we just got in under the wire . . ."

RICHARD GWYN

Canada—Small Pachyderm

OTTAWA — To gain a perspective on the state of Canada-U.S. relations today it isn't necessary to pay the least attention—and just possibly you didn't in fact pay any attention at all—to the declarations made a few months ago by External Affairs Minister Allan MacEachen and by U.S. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger that our cross-border dealings have changed from those of a "special relationship" to those of a "unique relationship."

With the best will in the world it is hard to find between those two phrases a semantic distinction let alone a substantive difference. To figure out what's going on it's more useful to try to decipher the meaning behind two recent news stories.

The first story, out of Washington, reported that the U.S. state department has started negotiations that could lead to the import of two million tons of potash a year into the U.S. from Russia.

Richer Northerners

The second story, out of both Ottawa and Washington, reported that of this year, during the first three months, the per capita gross national product in the U.S. reached $7,565 while in Canada the comparable figure was $7,652, or $87 a person higher.

The point about the second story is the easier to make. For the first time since the pilgrim fathers and Samuel de Champlain bumped into this continent, 370 years ago, the northerners are on the average richer than the southerners. Canada's sluggish economic recovery will soon lose us this statistical edge. But it won't change the reality. We no longer compare to the U.S. as does a mouse to an elephant, to use that old analogy. We compare as does a small elephant to a very large one.

Elephants, even if unequal in size, should be able to deal with each other as equals. The second story illustrates how far we still have to go to shuck off our old hang-ups.

The Saskatchewan potash industry today supplies two-thirds of the needs of the U.S. market. Saskatchewan Premier Allan Blakeney has announced plans to nationalize the mines, most of them U.S.-owned.

For this action, Blakeney was taken to task in a recent speech by the new U.S. ambassador to Ottawa, Thomas Enders. "We are concerned where takeover is used to gain a quasi-monopoly position," said Enders. "Statements that this power would be used benignly are not adequate assurance."

Wait a minute, though. Is potash production in Russia, with whom the U.S. now is negotiating, less nationalized than that in Saskatchewan? Is the Russian potash industry not a monopoly rather than just a measly "quasi-monopoly?" And are assurances from a communist regime, particularly now that detente is a dirty word, more to be trusted than those of a vaguely social democratic government in Saskatchewan?

Those questions are rhetorical. The answer they add up to is that Enders is talking nonsense. Skilled nonsense mind you, uttered with a straight face.

Other examples of Ender's debating style are easy to find. In a recent speech he described the Foreign Investment Review Act as "more far-reaching than similar legislation in other indutrialized democracies." This description would surprise the Japanese and French, to cite only the most obvious cases. It would surprise also the U.S. financial weekly Barron's which commented the other week: "The only U.S. business which wouldn't be cordially welcomed to Canada is Murder Inc."

My purpose here isn't to criticize Enders. Diplomats are sent abroad to utter nonsense for the good of their own countries. Enders does this with great effect. He is tough, arrogant, brillaint and vain, with a good deal to be vain about, including his height which is six feet, seven inches and a bit. Enders has outfooted the external affairs department and deals directly, as no U.S. ambassador before him has done, with provincial governments and with federal departments like agriculture and industry, trade and commerce.

My purpose instead is to make the point that Canada-U.S. relations are no longer, except in bicentennial rhetoric, either "special" or "unique." Rather, they are equal.

Mouse Squeaks

When you've been a mouse for so long, equality is very hard to accept. Energy Minister Alistair Gillespie has publically expressed his concern over the Saskatchewan potash takeover. A former head of the Foreign Investment Review Agency has felt it necessary to explain that its main purpose is to promote, not impede, foreign investment in Canada. The Senate has panicked at the thought of cutting-back commercials beamed into Canada by U.S. border television stations (the U.S., by the way, four years ago negotiated a no cross-border commercials agreement with Mexico).

The maddening part is that on all these issues were we should be firm, we are soft, while at the same time where we should be soft we are firm. The other day MacEachen accused U.S. President Gerald Ford of "political interference" because Ford urged the U.S. Olympic committee to try to get Taiwan admitted to the games. That's the squeak of a mouse.

RRSPs

There appears to be some misunderstanding about our resolution on RRSPs. We are asking the minister of finance to delete the term "maturity at age 71" from the Income Tax Act altogether.

Under present legislation you are forced by the legislation into a lifetime contract with an insurance company when you reach age 71. The penalty for not going along with this requirement is that you must deregister and pay income tax all at once on the full amount of the plan. (The fact that share values of your plan could be at an all-time low when you reach age 71 is overlooked completely, not to mention having to buy a lifetime annuity contract).

The effect of the change the Consumers' Association of Canada has proposed, would be that upon reaching age 71 your plan would not be taxed immediately. You would not be required to change from your existing investments to purchase a lifetime annuity. Your plan would no longer be an RRSP. Subsequent contributions to it would not be deductible from income for tax purposes. Any income earned by it would be taxable income; and any amount taken out would be taxed in respect of the amount withdrawn, as and when received. For example: at age 71, if you had a plan containing $50,000 and take out $10,000 annually over the next five years, you would pay tax only on the amount received each year.

The disposition of a plan's assets in the event of death after age 71 would be determined by beneficiary designation, as it is under present legislation, i.e.: the surviving spouse could roll over the funds into his or her own plan. Second-generation beneficiaries would be taxed on the amount received, subject to general averaging (average of four preceding years and current year's income), or he or she could buy a forward income averaging annuity, in which case income tax would be payable on the amount of annuity income received each year.—Tom Delaney, Consumers' Association of Canada, Barrie, Ont. Branch.

How much longer can Canadians afford to live in Canada and eat out at double the cost down there?—J. P. Thornton, 943 Wilmer Street.

Bleeding Hearts

Your Canadian Press story entitled Invitation to a Hanging (Times, July 15), has been told and retold a hundred times by various writers over the years. These stories are obviously an attempt by the bleeding hearts to circumvent reality. I wonder how the story would read if a victim of one of these mad-dog killers could come back to life and relate the circumstance of their death?

This is impossible, however we are capable of imagination in the case of small children being violated and murdered. It is not hard to imagine the terrifying prelude to the final blackness of death.

What about the young constable, married with a couple of nice kids and a lovely wife, who joined the police force not only to earn a decent living for his family but to lay his life on the line for you and me. There were no witnesses to his death, just the mad-dog killer. What were his last thoughts as the bullets or knife to his body to sever vital organs? Were they of his family, or did he make one last heroic attempt to reach his gun to eliminate this subhuman before he killed someone else. We will never know.

We have been abandoned to the pervert killers, killers for money or just killers for the fun of it. What are that bunch of idiots in Ottawa thinking of. Just because we have changed our environment over the decades from farm, ranch, forest and stream to big city, plastic and glitter, doesn't mean human nature has changed.—Ed Wakefied, Sidney.

Treason

The National Defence Act still requires the mandatory death penalty for proved military crimes such as desertion, treason, security leaks, insubordination, cowardice, etc. These crimes subject the nation to potential invasion, with destruction of property, mass slaughter of citizens, and possible takeover of the nation.

Slaughter of civilians means the killing of individuals. Why demand the death penalty for the military criminal who might cause the death of individual citizens and allow the civilian murderer who kills one or more individuals to get a prison sentence?

Does the threat to national sovereignty and to property make the difference?—D. Templin, Victoria.

Heritage Homes

As a founding member of the Hallmark Society, let me say how grateful I was for your thoughtful and appreciative editorial of July 15 (Preserving the Past). Many people have indeed worked very hard to find a balanced and rational solution to a complex problem—how to preserve and enhance the environment for the many without burdening the few. In your list of credits I think you might have mentioned the continued interest and balanced reporting of the press which has been a very real factor in changing public awareness of preservation possibilities.

Unfortunately, there will still be a few people who will object to the demolition freeze imposed last week by the city. Almost certainly these will be individuals, businesses or groups who have not taken the trouble to learn the positive benefits of heritage preservation as it applies to them as well as the rest of us. Time and again we have come across people who think that preservationists turn a blind eye to the difficulties of property-owners, that we carry on in some kind of a pink fog of idealism, leaving them holding the bag. In fact, as many property-owners have discovered to their rather chagrined surprise, Hallmark members are aware of the problems and have spent most of our efforts finding solutions to those problems, at municipal, provincial and practical levels.

City council has expressed its determination again and again that no individual should suffer any real loss, and are now convinced that with certain incentives, heritage preservation is a practical possibility for the majority of buildings considered to be heritage. They have not just simplistically decided to be prohibitive.

And still there are those who don't want to learn, who refuse to discuss options, who refuse invitations to consider alternatives. There are still some who plead special privilege, or who isolate themselves from learning the benefits available to them, and lock their thought processes into rigid moulds which only a painful wrench will loosen. Some realtors have learned the new benefits. Some owners are wildly enthusiastic over possibilities which never occurred to them

Ignorance is not bliss; ignorance is pain and fear. Three cheers for city council in recognizing the need to meet fear with firmness.—Carolyn Smyly, 4354 Wilkinson Road.

Yet More Ferries

The basic facts about B.C. Ferries need restating. Unless we keep them in mind we are bound to reach different conclusions.

One of the basic facts is this: it costs $15 to transport a car, by ferry, across the Strait of Georgia. The old fare used to be $5. Now it is $10. The B.C. taxpayer therefore picks up part of a tab for every automobile moving on B.C. Ferries. That tab is $5 a car. And, in distance terms, it works out to about 20 cents a mile.

Fact number two is that the total subsidy to B.C. Ferries in 1976 will be upwards of $25 million — enough to pay all of the interest and upkeep charges necessary to build and maintain a two-lane Trans-Canada standard highway from Kamloops to Vancouver.

It is obvious from facts one and two that everyone who uses B.C. Ferries to transport their car, truck or trailer to and from Vancouver Island is getting assistance from taxpayers in the rest of the province. It is obvious, also, that Vancouver Island has the equivalent of a first-class highway connection with the mainland. Far from being discriminated against, they are getting first-class treatment.

And who would want it otherwise?—Jack Davis, Minister of Transport and Communications.

Life, Liberty and The Hot Pursuit of Happiness

By TERRY COLEMAN
Manchester Guardian

Two hundred years ago the American rebels assembled at the Continental Congress in Philadelphia were busy ordering sheet-iron kettles for the army to be supplied at one third of a dollar each by Thomas Bates, blacksmith, and agreeing to receive leaders of the six Indian nations who begged to be allowed to call the future American president by the name of Great Tree.

And 200 years ago, after arranging for a supply of flints for the troops at New York, Congress declared that among the unalienable rights of man were life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and then passed on to hire a ship belonging to Mr. Walker.

The "resolution regarding independence," better known as the Declaration of Independence, was drafted by Thomas Jefferson. A committee hacked it about, removing the more entertaining abuse of George III, making 86 changes in all, but allowing Jefferson's "pursuit of happiness" to stand. Perhaps happiness was thought innocuous enough. But it is a phrase that has coloured the lives and expectations of every generation of Americans since. No other nation after all, has ever been promised so much.

Scene from Logan's Run . . . vision of the future?

Property First

That same year, as it happened, Samuel Johnson was telling Boswell that happiness consisted in a multiplicity of agreeable consciousness, but also that no man was ever happy except when he was drunk, not even when he was driving rapidly in a postchaise. Johnson, however, was then in his mid-60s, and a Christian, who would expect little happiness in this life. Jefferson was only 33, and, at best, a deist. He was a man of the Enlightenment. He did also pursue pleasure. On July 4, after approving his own declaration, he paid for five pairs of women's gloves.

What he had done, in part, was to adopt the theories of John Locke, but Locke had written "life, liberty, and the pursuit of property," and it was the pursuit of property, or that of property allied to happiness which was later written into the Constitution of the individual states. Pennsylvania legislated for life, liberty, property, reputation, and happiness, in that order.

The pursuit of happiness was very much an idea of the times. A poem of 1771, printed in London, bore just that title, but was sceptical of success. But this right and expectation of happiness is still deep in the mind of Americans. Everyone says: "Have a good day."

The girl who gives you a boarding pass says with sincerity to all passengers that she hopes they'll enjoy the flight, when flying to most of them is a routine to be got over with.

There is an American custom called the Happy Hour, usually two hours, from five to seven p.m., during which two cocktails are served for the price of one. There, of course, the American and the Johnsonian ideas might be thought to meet, but, it won't do to say that. The American pursuit of happiness is in earnest, and the expectation of enjoyment universal and unquestioned.

The assumption is so unquestioned that hopes are raised, and promises made, where they ought not to be. I heard a Presbyterian minister, addressing his congregation, assure them: "Jesus is here and will guide your week, and will not disappoint you." Jesus, I suspect, makes no such bargain, even with Americans, even in return for good conduct. There is a constant struggle which you might call "How to be Happy though American," and happiness is achieved, if necessary, by delusion. The aged Negro leaning on a broom says he is happy where he is because things are bad everywhere, and he says that cheerfully. The bum in a New York park, not even drunk, says he has a good life. No one admits to misery, even when it is self-evident.

It is all very strange to an Englishman, who needs to have it explained, particularly nowadays, even though it was J. F. Mill, and later Bentham, both Englishmen, who held that an action was right if it tended to produce happiness.

But how, for instance, did the Jeffersonian mind jump so easily from property to happiness?

Robert J. Lifton is a Professor of Psychology at Yale, whom I found, as he admitted, pursuing happiness in his summer house at Cape Cod. He could guess, he said, that from the beginning the Founding Fathers had been prepared to demand a great deal from the cosmos, claiming a special right and promise of happiness because they were a blessed, almost chosen, people. Americans believe themselves to have been made virtuous. Until recently they had assumed and attained victory in all wars.

Can Accept Less

Such a massive expectation as happiness could only lead to disappointment, but the vision, the hope, and the freedom to demand were important. Having by habit attempted something beyond one's grasp, one could accept a little less. America had more than its fair share of the idea that desires should become reality, but again this Utopian longing had often been assuaged by more prosperity.

We talked about the American longing for political certainties, which brought us to Jimmy Carter. Professor Lifton thinks that in a way he is lucky to be standing for president in the bicentennial year, because there is a hunger for the glorious American of the past when the dream was still believable, and the fundamentalism of Carter embodied some of that past, at least before Watergate.

Professor Lifton is not sure about Carter, but fascinated by him. Carter as president might do nothing, but in a funny way that was unlikely; or he could be despotic, because there was something scary in his self-confidence, in his certainty that he was right and in his unwillingness to be crossed; or he could, having incurred few political doubts to hinder his freedom, do really innovative things. Professor Lifton rather expects a mixture of the second and third possibilities.

Now America was going to be a world power for some time, but a world power in decline, and decline was puzzling to Americans. "If you have the sense of being a blessed country, and favoured by God, when you become a world power it seems only natural and appropriate. When that's taken away the impact can be very strong. Because it's felt not to be part of the rhythm of human events. The sense of a right to happiness and success might then lead to a reaction to restore the idea of a past of perfect harmony and virtue that never was."

It was this that had happened to Germany and Italy in the twenties and thirties. But he did not want to overstate matters. The sense of unlimited possibilities was typically American and still existed: but the American Dream had never been fully an ideology.

But it had a litany, surely, of things held to be self-evident? "America has a set of visonary claims, and a litany around them, and expectations and convictions, but not an ideology in the grand manner — not like Marxism of Roman Catholicism, not with an answer for everything." The Dream might lead to hubris, and to a downfall, but there was always the imagination, the potential for change. It was clearly different from the European and Asian experience which said nothing could be done because man was man.

Robert Lifton is a writer and academic. Robert S. Folsom is mayor of Dallas. He has a dream, which is that Dallas shall be and is the city of the future. I heard him addressing an open-air meeting. He was proud, he said — at which ducks on a nearby pond quacked loudly — that Dallas was such a city. Why, the producer who had made Logan's Run, a science-fiction film, had written to say he had chosen Dallas as his location because Dallas was the city of the future. (Applause and quacks.)

The fact is, as I see it, that parts of downtown Dallas look like a bombsite, bare except for car parks. And if Dallas is the city of the future, the Lord save us from the others like it. The airport is naturally, being Texan, the largest in the world, in area, but the terminals of the different airlines are so far apart that people miss their planes. It is the most modern and the least efficient airport I have ever seen.

Anyway, after the open-air meeting, when the conversation turned to happiness, Mayor Folsom, who is in real property, first summarized for me the reasons for Britain's downfall and, then, turning to the Declaration of Independence, said: "I tell you, the pursuit of a million dollars is better than the million dollars when you get them."

I had not mentioned a million dollars; he had instinctively made the reversion from happiness to property, except that this is unfair to Locke, who saw property as the whole estate of man, and not just material things.

Mayor Folsom is white, and a self-evident ass, who is proud to have saved the wealthy citizens of Dallas a little in taxes by keeping the street lights turned off on the freeway. Mrs. Juanita Craft is black though she rejects the word, saying she is American and is a woman of shining intelligence. She too lives in Dallas, but in a district where no white lives. She says dryly that the first American blood shed in the War of Independence was that of a Negro. This is Crispus Attucks, killed in a Boston riot in 1770.

The Negroes, she says, fought for nothing and the whites for 18 dollars a week. Mrs. Craft is now 74, and can remember the time, when she was seven, when she attended a barbeque given by J. C. Maxwell for his former slaves, among them her grandfather. Her great-grandfather was sold from Virginia, away from his wife and 10 children whom he never saw again.

As to the pursuit of happiness, "beautiful words," she says. "I am disturbed by all our documents. When I read them I almost choke up, when I see our struggle. Things that are good for you are good for me. A decent house would also make me happier. We too want the niceties and not the rigors of life."

Mrs. Craft has been a widow for many years. She has supported herself by making dresses, hats, aprons, and fancy jewelry. Since the mid-thirties she has campaigned for black rights, against the Jim Crow laws which in Texas provided among other things, for the separation of black and white "in showers and coalmines" — both of these in one single statute.

Wants Niceties

She was one of the first to take part in sit-ins at diners. "We don't serve Negroes," she was told. "I don't eat Negroes either, she retorted; "I just want some food." But the fact is, however much she may choke on the constitutional documents of the United States, she is as American in her cast of thought and in her hope of turning ideas into realities as any of those white Americans who were and are prepared to demand a great deal of the cosmos. She demands, if not happiness, then the right to it. She wants the niceties of life.

When the European immigrants came in during the last century some of the more credulous really did believe that the streets of New York were paved with gold. When they got there they learned three things — first that the streets were not paved with gold; secondly, that they were not paved at all; and thirdly, that they were expected to pave them.

Jefferson liked to describe his Declaration as an expression of the mind of America. It was, of course, an expression of his own. Rationally viewed, there is no more right to happiness than there is a self-evident equality among men.

Jefferson, even though he was of Welsh descent, was a rational man of the Age of Enlightenment, who knew perfectly well that he was stating not a self-evident truth but an aspiration. He died 50 years to the day after the Declaration of Independence was proclaimed, pretty well willing himself to keep alive until that anniversary. Just before midnight on July 3, he asked, "This is the Fourth?" They were almost his last words.

Taiwan Goes About its Business

By JAY MATHEWS

TAIPEI — Next to the crumbling yellow stucco U.S. embassy here, Taiwanese workmen are busy pounding in supports for a new roadway overpass, each jarring crash a reminder that they are confidently going about their business despite the fading official American presence.

The last real panic here came four years ago when Taiwan's old friend, Richard M. Nixon, turned up in Peking to chat with its old enemy Mao Tse-tung. Many property owners here sold out fast and cheap, eager to escape before the Americans deserted them altogether, and the bottom fell out of the real estate market. Now they are back, building new roads, electric plants and two miles of high-rises on the Tunhwa Road from the airport that would rival many modern American developments.

International indignities, like humiliation last week at the Olympic Games in Moontreal, upset many Taiwanese here, although several suggest that last year's decision, since rescinded, to bar Taiwan from the Little League World Series was a greater blow. Today they are more interested in signs that Mao's health is bad, the Chinese Mainland is restless and the economy on this island is booming.

"With the food here good and plentiful," said a 40-year-old taxi driver and father of four children, "why should we worry." Since the death of Chiang Kai-shek last year one does not often hear hopes of actually recovering the Mainland lost to the Communists in 1949. But officials of the government run by Chiang's son, Premier Chiang Ching-kuo, still insist that they have more behind their new feeling of security than full rice bowls.

"We have a cause, and in that we are confident," said Ding Mou-shih, director-general of the government information office. Other officials appeared concerned that a visiting American not get the impression they felt too good about the move toward full Washington-Peking relations. "You stick around and you'll see how we sweat it out sometimes," said Jimmy Wei, director of the Central News Agency.

With only 16 million people and a volume of exports that makes up nearly 50 per cent of its Gross National Product, Taiwan is extremely susceptible to changes in the world economy. The recession dropped its growth rate from 12 to 1 per cent in 1974, but it is back now to an estimated 7 per cent, greater than predicted last year.

Per capita income is about $700, second only to Japan in Asia, and an energetic birth control program has kept population growth at less than two per cent. When thousands of factory workers were laid off during the 1974 depression, "there was a safety valve of the large and fertile agricultural sector which they went back to," said one economist.

The sound economy and Chiang Ching-Kuo's image as a down-to-earth, hardworking administrator have helped keep dissent at a minimum, Publications critical of the government are not tolerated, although the newspapers here usually report Taiwan's troubles in international bodies like the Olympics objectively. The Taiwan independence movement, the underground group opposing control of the government by the Mainland Chinese who came here in 1949, has been quiet and some native Taiwanese have won government positions.

Everything should continue to go smoothly, say a dozen diplomats, journalists, bureaucrats and businessmen here, if the anticipated normalization of relations between the United States and the People's Republic of China is, in the words of one, "handled properly."

Sun Yat-sen memorial in Taipei

What the Taiwanese say they will find hard to take is another surprise like Nixon's announcement of his trip to Peking. The Taiwanese do not fear a loss of trade; their trade with Japan, West Germany and other nations that have spurned them diplomatically has actually increased since. But they would be hurt by an abrupt U.S. cutoff of the supply of parts for military equipment purchased from U.S. contractors and the $80 million Washington is still supplying annually in long-term credits for military arms purchases.

The chance of an actual Chinese invasion of Taiwan appears unlikely to both Americans and Taiwanese here as long as Peking fears the Soviet Union and continues to give low priority to the buildup of its armed forces. According to the Institute for Strategic Studies ni London, Peking has only 46 landing craft — about the same number Taiwan has.

Foreign investors interested in Taiwan's booming economy acknowledge there will be a period of uncertaintly when the United States finally moves its embassy from here to Peking. "But next year we are increasing our investment in Taiwan by 30 per cent," said one American - in - Hong - Kong banker. "We are preparing our people to just ride it out."

Many Taiwanese hedge their bets and seek Hong Kong visas or U.S. citizenship just to have a place to go if this island doesn't ride it out. Some grumble about the government. "This is a free country," said a restaurant owner here with Hong Kong resident status and a business in Los Angeles, "but with the taxes so high I wonder which side freedom is on."

At the U.S. embassy, where such things are watched closely, there has been no significant jump in the numbers of Taiwanese seeking some way out of the country to the U.S. If anyone is going to be leaving the island, U.S. officials here think it will be them, once the election year passes and Washington can resume efforts to upgrade its ties with Peking.

"It's not too grand, and it doesn't provide much space," said one U.S. official of the ramshackle, pre-war embassy building. "But then it doesn't make much sense to fix it up, does it?"

'LUCKY TO BE ALIVE' MAN GETS $20,000

A 21-year-old man, described by B.C. Supreme Court Justice Nathan Nemetz as "lucky to be alive" after a car accident, has been awarded $20,000 in damages.

He made the award in favor of Kim Allan Savage and against the estate of R. J. Codling.

Savage was a passenger in Codling's car which was involved in an accident with another car on the Sooke Road in Colwood Dec. 20, 1973.

Chief Justice Nemetz said Codling, 17, lost control of his car, crossed the double dividing line on the four-lane highway twice and then struck the second car.

Codling died in the accident and Savage was taken to hospital "in a state of confusion and has no memory either of the accident or events just before the accident."

BEFORE THE JUDGE

When Victoria area resident Tracy Lee Levers, 17, wrote a cheque Feb. 4 to buy $5,544 worth of furniture from a Victoria store, the bank account on which the cheque was written contained 45 cents.

Ten days later, when a Victoria car firm accepted another cheque from her in payment for a $6,395 automobile, her account contained 64 cents.

Those facts came out Tuesday in the Victoria provincial court section of Judge William Ostler after Ms. Levers pleaded guilty to eight charges containing a total of 14 counts of false pretences and one of failing to attend court.

The 14 counts concerned bad cheques cashed Oct. 18, 1975, to March 27 in Victoria, Saanich and Esquimalt for almost $13,442 in goods, with most of that amount resulting from the car and furniture.

Stays were entered on five other charges — three of violating court orders, one containing 11 counts of false pretences and one of attempted false pretences.

Ostler asked for a pre-sentence report and set sentencing for Aug. 6. Ms. Levers earlier was ordered detained in custody and is being held in Oakalla women's jail in Burnaby because there are no detention facilities on Vancouver Island for women.

Judge F. S. Green was sympathetic in the case of David James Anderson, 18, of 1704 Bay, but said he still had to impose a penalty which would show that probation orders must not be violated.

Anderson pleaded guilty to a Victoria charge of breaching an April 22 probation order, imposed for theft, by disobeying a condition for a curfew of 10 p.m. Sunday-Thursday and midnight Friday and Saturday.

Prosecutor Nicholas Lang said Anderson's attitude had "changed positively" since he was told the breach charge would be laid. Green fined Anderson $75, extended the probation by about three months and told the youth he must attend a weekend work program in Metchosin.

Green was also sympathetic in the case of Kevin Spielman, 18, of 1414 Hillside, but told him no one has the right to "let reactions carry you away."

Spielman pleaded guilty to a Victoria charge of common assault July 8 on a Victoria man. The other man stopped his car suddenly in front of Spielman's car and Spielman's pregnant wife hit the dashboard — "thank God she had her safety belt on."

Spielman later stopped the other car, got out and hit the driver once in the face and kicked him once on a leg. He was fined $125.

Bail was refused by Green for Ernest Frank Wythe, 18, of 2546 Quadra, who was ordered detained in custody on a Colwood charge of a break-in and theft Monday at Millstream Used Auto Parts, 2264 Millstream. Another person charged with Wythe was released on an undertaking to return and the charge was set over to Monday for further hearing. Wythe also faces a Victoria charge of possession of known stolen property, which was set for trial Sept. 2.

Gilles Joseph Doiron, 21, of 647 Michigan, was fined $75 by Green and put on probation for six months. Doiron pleaded guilty July 13 to a charge of possession of codeine Feb. 11 when police checked him in the 1100 block Langley.

Courtenay resident Oscar Antoine Audette, 43, was fined $250 by Ostler and put on probation for three months. Audette pleaded guilty earlier to an Esquimalt charge of theft July 1, 1975, of a heavy-duty power-jacking station whose value was estimated at $2,000.

Being handicapped doesn't mean sitting home these summer days.

The Greater Victoria Handicapped Persons' Recreation Centre, 2535 Government, is offering social and recreational programs for young people and adults.

Song Program Set for Gallery

A varied program of song will be presented Thursday in a summer music series at Greater Victoria Art Gallery, 1040 Moss.

The artists are soprano Susan Word and pianist Mary Des Roches.

The 8 p.m. program will include a selection of early Italian works by Stradella, Durante and Scarlatti and Puccini operatic arias. A medley of Gershwin tunes will contrast vividly with some French 19th-century art songs and the concert will conclude with five biblical lieder by Dvorak.

Both artists have been active with the Amity Singers and Ms. Word crowned an excellent record in the Victoria Music Festival by topping both opera and oratorio classes.

She is studying and rehearsing the leading role of Susanna for Vancouver Island Opera Association's debut production of Mozart's Marriage of Figaro, scheduled for November.

Ms. Des Roches, an outstanding pianist and accompanist, introduced the Suzuki plan for class piano teaching in Victoria and is a member of the Victoria Conservatory of Music faculty. The conservatory is co-operating in the present gallery series.

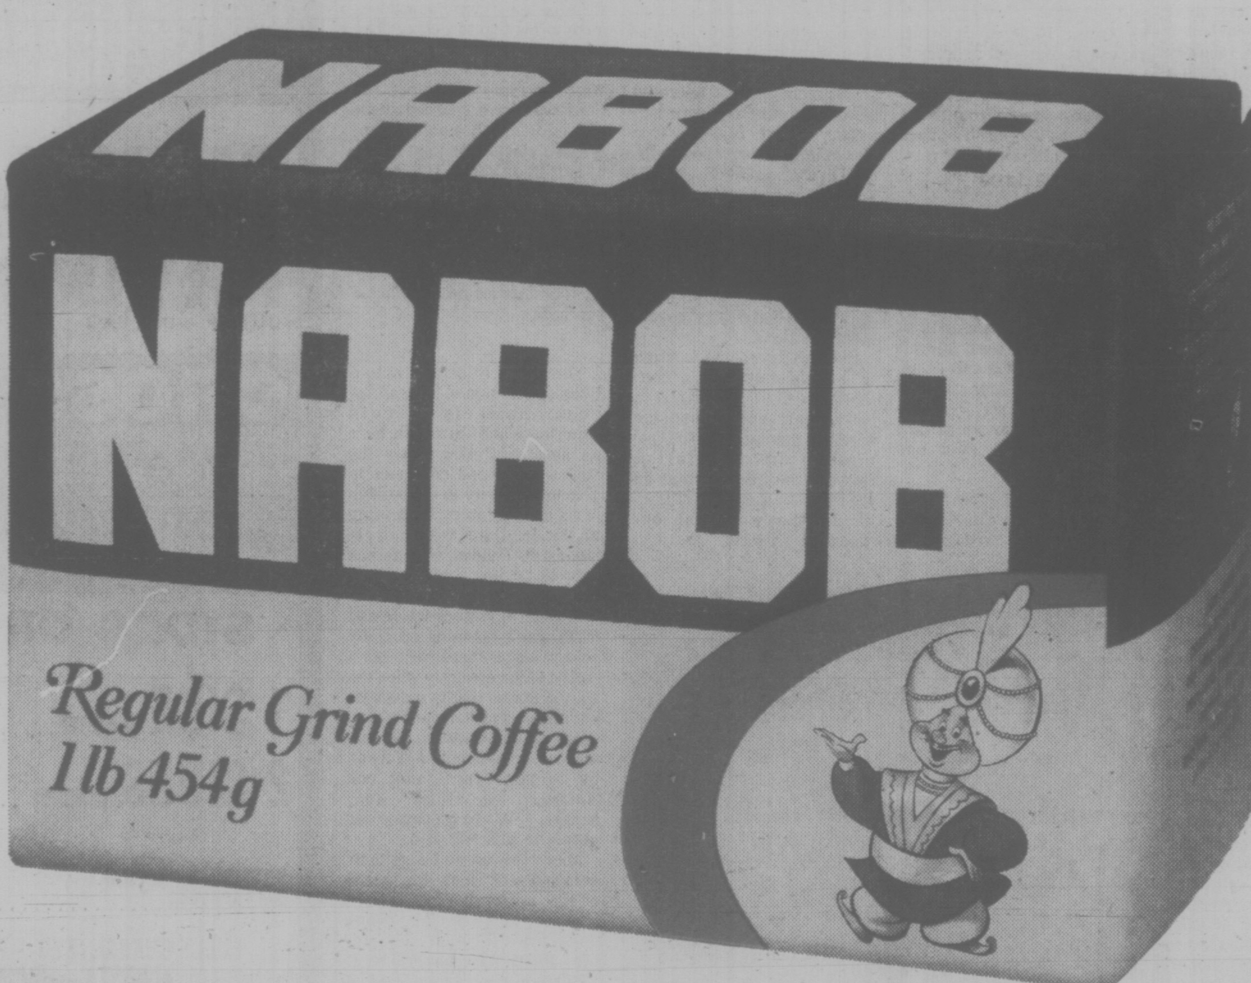
Another great NABOB innovation!

The flavourtight case for freshness!



Air is the enemy of coffee freshness and flavour.

Most coffee packs are paper thin—they let air in. And tinned coffee? The minute you open it air rushes in. You can't win!

But now, "Custom Roasted" Nabob Coffee is protected by a tough, new metal foil pack—with a thick, plastic skin that seals this coffee's freshness and flavour in.

Feel it. Squeeze it. It's not only the strongest coffee package on your grocer's shelf— it keeps Nabob fresher longer. You open it. Scoop out the freshest coffee you can buy. Then you fold it down tight. It means fresh, great-flavour coffee every time you brew.

"Custom Roasting" for flavour. Now, "the flavourtight case for freshness". Only Nabob is doing so much good for your coffee.

VICE-PRINCIPAL STUDY SET

Trustees are going to find out whether vice-principals are really needed in Greater Victoria's 40 elementary schools.

The move is part of a cost-control proposal from board chairman William Ross.

Trustees emphasized the move is only a study which might show vice-principals are vital.

Ross said new provincial legislation—Bill 55—contains provisions that give much more power to individual districts over the control of replacing school administrators.

It would become possible for the board to assign a teacher as a principal or vice-principal, they re-assign him to teaching, Ross said.

Currently, once a vice-principal has been assigned, he cannot be reassigned to a teaching level at a teacher's salary.

Trustee Lavinia Greenwood supported the investigation, but is opposed to eliminating vice-principals.

She said the position is important for training principals, and if they were eliminated, would put too much of an administrative workload on the principals.

Last GI Leaves Thailand But 'Advisers' Remain

BANGKOK (WP) — The 11-year-old U.S. military presence in Thailand came to an end Tuesday with the departure of the symbolic last serviceman.

The withdrawal, which was completed on the deadline set by the Thai government four months ago, set the stage for Thailand to improve its relations with the Communist regimes in Neighboring Vietnam and Laos.

The target day passed with minimal violence, despite widespread tension engendered by the anticipation of clashes between leftist university students and pro-American students of Bangkok's vocational schools, who had wanted the government to retain a U.S. armed presence in the country.

By nightfall, police reported that two plastic explosive devices had been thrown near the Pramian Grounds, an open field adjacent to Thammasat University, a centre of anti-American sentiment. Vocational students conducted an all-day rally at the grounds in favor of the United States. It was poorly attended. No injuries were reported from the explosions.

Monday night, Prime Minister Seni Pramoj appeared on nation-wide television with Foreign Minister Pichai Rattakul and armed forces supreme commander Adm. Sa-Ngad Chaloryu and appealed for order.

The premier assured viewers that the government had taken adequate security steps. These steps, although Seni did not mention it, included moving King Bhumibol Adulyadej and his family from their normal residence into the walled, ceremonial Grand Palace. A palace source said security officials feared that university students might attempt to enter the grounds of the royal residence, as they had done recently.

Under the agreement reached between the United States and Thailand, 270 U.S. military advisers are to remain in Thailand.

"WHOSE HOUSE IS THAT?"

People often ask about this place. It invites admiration with over 1840 sq. ft. and a beautiful waterview. Walk into this luxurious, ranch-style home with its thick W.W. carpets, and lovely draperies, admire the very attractive and unique F.P. that separates the large dining and living rooms, enjoy the breakfast nook in the spacious kitchen and make good use of the 3 bdrms. and den. Putter around in the large private yard with a heated pool off a sunroom and pick your own fruit this fall. This property is now offered, with good financing at $95,000.

25% Aluminum Price Hike Seen Next Year

MONTREAL (CP) — The price of aluminum may rise as much as 25 per cent during the next year, two securities analysts have told a seminar sponsored by Alcan Aluminium Ltd.

Analyst Stewart Spector of Oppenheimer and Co. New York, said higher production costs and a surge in demand will push the price of aluminum to about 50 cents a pound early next year from its current price of 44 cents a pound, and to 55 cents later in the year.

Anthony Hayes of Burns, Fry Ltd., Toronto, said that rising production costs will push the price to "well above 50 cents a pound," but he used one estimate of rising costs to demonstrate how the price might have to reach 72 cents to encourage the market.

The estimate assumed that the cost of newly-installed electrical power — a major input into aluminum production — will rise to 3.5 cents per kilowatt-hour from the .25 cents North American producers have been used to paying.

The increase is based on inflation and the increased cost of pollution control now required of coal-fired power stations.

Hayes was critical of the aluminum industry's marketing techniques, which he said have offered low prices to induce expanded use of the metal.

He said the industry now finds itself unable to afford the investment needed to meet anticipated demand.

His analysis of the operations of the four largest North American producers — Alcan, Alcoa, Reynold and Kaiser — showed their over-all return equity below average compared with United States manufacturing firms.

He predicted the result would be that capacity would fall behind demand during the next five years, as aluminum use recovers rapidly from its slack period last year, but firms will not be able to finance enough expansion to keep pace.

AEC Power

AEC Power Ltd. has signed an underwriting agreement for the sale of $100 million of first mortgage bonds bearing interest at a rate of 10¾ per cent. The bonds are being offered to the public by a group of investment dealers headed by Wood Gundy Ltd. AEC is constructing a utilities plant to provide electric energy and steam to the syncrude oil sands project.

Cinnabar Peak

Cinnabar Peak Mines Ltd. has been delisted from the Vancouver Stock Exchange at the firm's request. Cinnabar had signed an operating agreement with Ragan Construction Ltd. for exploration and development work on its coal properties near Hudson Hope. Under terms of the agreement, Ragan is to seek senior mine financing and will pay Cinnabar a minimum of $2 a ton gross royalty on any coal sold during the interin, subject to escalation in line with increases in the price of coal.

Kaiser

Kaiser Resources Ltd. has reported net earnings of $15,861,000 or 60 cents a share for the second quarter of 1976 on sales of $74,788,000.

These results compare with net earnings of $18,207,000 or 73 cents a share on sales of $64,312,000 in the 1975 second quarter. The company had an extraordinary gain of $1,408,000 or six cents a share a year ago from tax losses carried forward.

For the first half of this year, the company had net earnings of $30,455,000 or $1.16 a share compared with $33,428,000 or $1.36 a share a year ago. Last year's amount includes an extraordinary gain of $7,229,000 or 30 cents a share.

Sales were $144,282,000, compared with $113,501,000.

Edgar F. Kaiser, Jr., president and chief executive officer, said the net earnings in this year's second quarter were lower "primarily as a result of higher provisions for federal and provincial income taxes and the lack of extraordinary income from prior years' loss carry-forwards."

He said in a news release that shipments of metallurgical coal totalled 1,338,000 long tons in the second quarter of 1976, up from 1,116,000 long tons in the same 1975 period.

Kaiser said that as a result of a recent strike at the Sparwood mining and processing operations, the company's Japanese customers had diverted ships to other coal suppliers. The dispute has been settled.

Apartment Vacancies To Increase

By AL FORREST
Times Staff

Victoria's rental housing crisis should be over within 12 months, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation spokesman Ray Pitt said today.

The vacancy rate continues to be desperately low, he said, but it has increased to 0.3 per cent from virtually nil at this time last year.

And more new apartment buildings are being started each month.

"We expect the vacancy rate to return to normal levels within a year."

The normal vacancy rate for this area is between 3 per cent and 5 per cent.

Older apartment buildings are full but there are a number of vacancies in some of the newer apartment blocks.

The present vacancy list, such as it is, is confined mainly to Esquimalt. There the rate is 0.7 per cent, compared to 0.3 per cent for Victoria City, 0.2 per cent in Saanich and 0.1 per cent in Oak Bay. The vacancy rate is virtually nil in Sidney and in the Langford-View Royal area.

The numbers refer to existing apartment blocks and do not include recently-completed buildings that are just beginning to accept tenants.

The hopeful sign is that newly completed apartments have a vacancy rate of 3.6 per cent. At the present time there are not enough of these units to ease the pressure but the construction boom of apartments will accelerate in the Victoria area during the next 12 months and the problem should be solved by mid-1977.

Much of the new construction is being assisted by CMHC and the provincial department of housing. Grants and loans are made available to builders to enable them to provide affordable rents for the first 10 years of the building.

There were 870 apartment units completed in the Victoria area during the first six months of 1976, up slightly from 834 in the first half of 1975.

The outlook is even brighter for 1977. There were 1,572 apartment units started this year, up from 716 starts in 1975, and most of these units will be completed by next summer.

Saanich Set To Get Tough

Saanich public works committee Tuesday recommended tough mandatory fines for persons convicted of violating property and land-use bylaws.

The recommendation came after development engineer J. R. Walker presented his final report to the committee on proposed changes to 20 municipal bylaws.

His report follows a study of more than three months into bylaw permit fees and fines.

The committee asked for the review in early April hoping to bring permit fees in line with actual costs to the municipality and setting fines that would provide a greater deterrence.

The committee's recommendation, if accepted by council, will mean a doubling, tripling or even quadrupling of most fines and permits in 19 of the 20 bylaws under review.

The new fines, which up to now have been left to the discretion of a judge, or were low, would range from $25 to $1,000 depending on the bylaw and number of violations.

The bylaws cover fill, swimming pool fences, signs, animals, streets and traffic, garbage, noxious weeds, control and use of parks, blasting, protection of boulevards, soil removal, protection of waterways, untidy premises, subdivision and development controls, mobile homes and trailer parks, coin operated dry cleaning establishments, and incinerators.

B.C. to Probe Firm Promoting Police Circuses

The B.C. government has jumped into an investigation started by the Ontario consumer services ministry into the operations of a California company which promotes the annual Victoria police-sponsored circus.

Consumer Services Minister Rafe Mair said he would contact Ontario officials today to find out the results of their investigation and said B.C. will launch its own probe.

The Ontario ministry last week said Gatti-Charles Production Inc. of Orange, Calif., and the Canadian Dominion Productions Inc. of Vancouver, used police and firefighters associations as fronts to raise thousands of dollars.

In a cease and desist order, the ministry said the promoters made "false, misleading and deceptive or unconscionable representations" in fund-raising campaigns.

A spokesman for the owners, promoters and sponsors of the Canadian International Circus, have denied the allegations, saying the group always has operated entirely within federal and provincial laws.

In Victoria, Douglas Richardson, president of the Victoria City Police Athletic Association, said today he was waiting until the circus committee chairman returns from holiday before starting their own investigation.

He said, however, he "may have to talk to the provincial consumer affairs people" about the matter.

Gatti-Charles has provided a circus for about the last 10 years which is sponsored by the Victoria Police Mutual Benefit Association and the police union.

Since the relationship began the association received about 20 per cent of the gross and Gatti-Charles' slice, said Richardson, was about 80 per cent. Last year the association got $14,000.

In Ontario the government order cited one case in Guelph where the police association was to receive $4,000, although $59,647 was raised.

But Howard Staats, a Brantford lawyer representing the group, said the two companies retain an independent agent to sell and distribute tickets and have no part in organizing of ticket sales either directly or indirectly.

The ministry's order said the campaigns involved tickets allegedly sold to allow underprivileged children and families to attend circuses. Large portions of the funds raised went to the promoters rather than the charities or groups involved, it said.

Price Boost For Haircut?

Union barbers in Victoria are expected to discuss the possibility of a price hike at a meeting Thursday night.

Local president Len Fraser said there is no proposal at present for raising the price of a conventional haircut from $4, although Vancouver barbers have agreed to a 50-cent increase to $5 effective Aug. 1.

Victoria prices traditionally follow Vancouver after an interval, maintaining a differential of 25-50 cents.

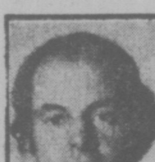
Mill Bay Ferry Keeps on Chugging —An Oddity Weathering the Storm



max low

I used to think it was only the English who hated to see tradition die.

But no. Right here on Vancouver Island we have a quaint old ferry to nowhere. Or rather a ferry that doesn't need to go anywhere. But it keeps right on going.

It is, of course, the Mill Bay, one of the mini members of the B.C. Ferries fleet. It crosses the sheltered stretch of seaway between Brentwood Bay on the Saanich Peninsula and Mill Bay north of Victoria.

Once upon a time, a few years back, the Mill Bay had the distinction of being the only ferry in Canada that plied between two points which could also be reached by road.

In other words: ferries are traditionally used to link islands. If you miss the boat, that's it. You're stranded. But with the good old Mill Bay ferry it isn't like that. You can turn around and drive from Brentwood up the Peninsula and over the Malahat Drive to Mill Bay. And now in Canada there are a few cross-lake ferries that share this distinction with the Mill Bay.

Of course, in the bad old horse-and-wagon days when the first ferry (then named the Cascade) started to make the crossing in 1924, getting over the Malahat was pretty grim. The road was narrow and winding and often shrouded in fog. And it wasn't made much better until late in the 1940s, so many people preferred to make the pleasant ferry crossing rather than the 40-mile detour.

Today, though, the Malahat is, comparatively, part of a super highway running Up-Island. So, really, there is no need for the little ferry. Yet it plods on regardless, an oddity, something different to take visiting friends for a ride on; another of our peculiar tourist attractions.

Over the years the Mill Bay, which replaced the Cascade (later renamed the Brentwood) in 1956, has survived attempts to get it stopped and to have it moved somewhere else. Now it has to survive the economy.

Along with all the other ferries, the Mill Bay had its rates doubled on June 1. It now costs $2.50 per car, $1 for the driver and every adult passenger, 50 cents for children and $1 for motorcycles to make the 25-minute, three-and-a-half-mile crossing. And quite a few people are realizing it's a hell of a lot cheaper to make that detour now over the Malahat.

Capacity of the Mill Bay — which sails with a four-man crew, a captain, a mate, an engineer and a seaman, is 16 to 18 cars depending on their size and how you squeeze them in.

Yet, when I made the early morning crossing from Mill Bay (8:05 a.m.) the other day, one grader and four small cars made up the total load from Brentwood. The 8:40 trip back to Mill Bay had eight cars and an ambulance.

I decided to stay aboard for a third crossing — to Brentwood again — and the 9:15 sailing had a rather incongrous load to say the least. There were two Cadillacs (one a splended 1914 model carrying Fred Bell and his wife Glenda from Ladysmith to a vintage car rally in Belligham, Wash., and the other an almost new one), a battered old truck and a boy on a bike.

"Ah, there's no class discrimination aboard the old Mill Bay," quipped bearded mate Ed Nelson as he collected the fares. He knows. He's seen all kinds of weird vehicles in his 10 years aboard the ferry.

But 10 years going too and fro is not long when you consider that captain Glen Ryder's been doing it for 20 years and engineer Wilf Hankin has had 23 years on the same crossing.

Wilf, who like Ed keeps bees as a hobby, was with the Cascade when it was called the Brentwood, helped fit the Mill Bay out in the shipyard, and has been with her ever since.

Captain Ryder, who lives on his small farm near Elk Lake, joined the Mill Bay a couple of months after it started on the run in 1956. There is a second complete crew, which I did not meet, headed by Captain Dave McGarva.

Up in the cramped wheelhouse, Capt. Ryder admitted:

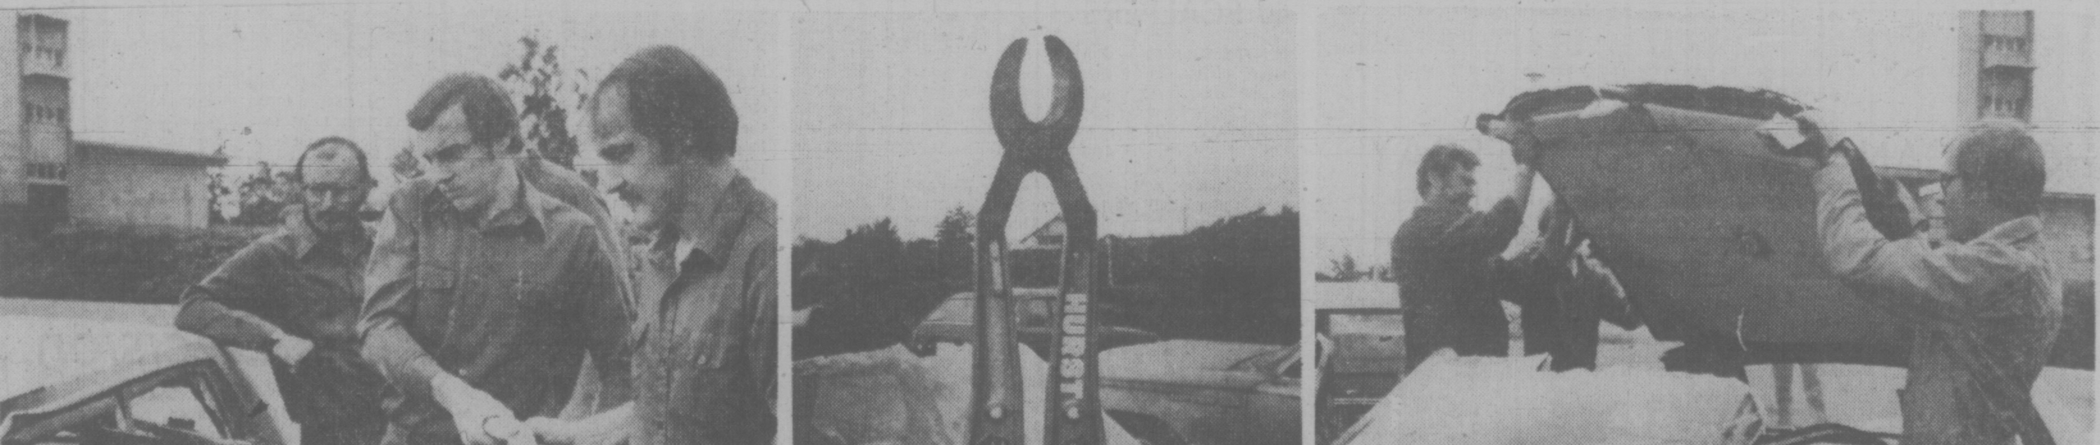
"We have carried a awful lot more than this in the past." But he remains optimistic.

"We've had some overloads recently — granted, not as many as we used to have, but then everything is down on the Island," he said.

"It's a combination of many things," pointed out the Mate, "the ferry rate increase didn't help, but there are also the Olympic Games and the U.S. Bicentennial."

Anyway, things are starting to pick up again, both men insist brightly, with a belief that the old Mill Bay can once again weather the storm.

And, as you watch the little ferry putter off on another unhurried trip over the calm water . . . you kind of hope they're right.



RIPPING THROUGH wreckage is as simple as pressing a button when there's a Jaws of Life machine handy as Saanich firemen demonstrated this morning. The machine cost $8,000, half paid by the Provincial Emergency Program. Victoria fire department bought a similar unit a year ago but it has been idle since May when someone stole its engine at the scene of a fire. At left firemen Dennis Taylor, Jack Thame and Ron Cullis attack a car simulating a rescue operation. Minutes later (right), the roof is off, peeled clean as if it were a can of beans. Japan's Win Marred By Disputes

MONTREAL (CP) — Japan, unbeaten in Olympic and world championship gymnastics team competitions since 1960, clung to its supremacy after an evening of controversial drama Tuesday.

Trailing the Soviet Union after Sunday's compulsory exercises, and without injured world champion Shigeru Kasamatsu, Japan had a tortuous struggle to win the men's gold medal with a total of 576.85 points.

Shun Fujimoto limped out of the arena with a damaged knee after the rings to reduce Japan to a minimum of five competitors.

The event was further interrupted by disagreements between officials, sustained booing and yet some amazingly agile moves by both leading teams.

The disputes over the marking began after a splendidly controlled ring routine by Sawao Kato, twice Olympic individual champion, who was awarded a mediocre 9.80 points.

The crowd jeered the marking for over a minute. Then Arthur Gander, Swiss president of the International Gymnastic Federation, walked over to the officials and spoke to the Russian judge, Leonard Asariam.

Then when Russia's European champion Nicolai Andrianov was given 9.50 points, for a high bar routine, the Russian coach, Leonid Arkaev, raced across the arena to talk to Gander.

Arkaev said later: "I felt like protesting, but I know from experience that it is no use on these occasions."

Finally after some masterly high bar exercises by Hisato Igarashi, which received 9.85 points, the Russian head judge on the apparatus, Boris Shakhlin, the former Olympic champion, had a conference of officials. But the scoring remained unaltered.

The tense situation seemed to rouse the Japanese to their finest form in the optional exercises.

East Germany won the bronze.

Canada's men did not qualify as a team for the Olympics but three made it as individuals and all missed making into the top 36 who go on to individual all-around competition.

Keith Carter of Winnipeg was 47th over all, Philip Delesalle of Victoria 50th and Pierre Leclerc of Ste. Therese, Que., 54th.

Best showing on a single apparatus was 25th on the parallel bars for Leclerc.

On the horizontal bars Delesalle was 34th, Carter 55th and Leclerc 61st, in the horse vault Carter 30th, Delesalle 37th and Leclerc 40th, on the rings Leclerc 46th, Carter 49th and Delesalle 60th, side horse Carter 61st, Delesalle 67th and Leclerc 70th and in floor exercises Carter 33rd, Delesalle 35th and Leclerc 46th.

Russian Cyclist Disqualified

MONTREAL (AP) — Klaus-Jurgen Grunke of East Germany, 1975 world champion, won the gold medal for the cycling kilometre time trial in 1:05.927 Tuesday, and the man most fancied to beat him, Eduard Rapp of the Soviet Union, was disqualified after covering a bare two metres.

Jocelyn Lovell of Toronto, the Pan-American Games gold medallist, finished a disappointing 13th.

Rapp, twice world champion and second to Grunke last year, started on the gun, then slewed round, apparently deciding he had not got away well and wanting a restart. But the rules forbid that and the Russian's appeal was thrown out.

Surprise silver medallist was 19-year-old Belgian champion Michel Vaarten, timed at 1:07.516, and bronze medallist was a three-times world champion, 29-year-old Niels Fredborg of Denmark,

MONTREAL (CP) — The 21st Olympiad continued to provide world record performances in wholesale fashion Tuesday and Shannon Smith of New Westminster, B.C. captured Canada's second medal of the Games.

Smith won a bronze by clipping nearly half a second off her own Canadian record in the 400-metre freestyle. She finished third behind East Germany's Petra Thumer, who set a world record, and Shirley Babashoff of the United States.

If there was a weak spot on the potent East German girls' team, it should have been in the 400-metre freestyle.

Barbara Krause, who set the world record in the event only a month ago, was prevented by illness from competing.

But Thumer made up for her team-mate's absence, lowering Krause's world record from 4:11.69 to 4:09.89. Shannon was timed in 4:14.60 and Babashoff in 4:10.46.

Meanhwile, Nancy Garapick of Halifax, Wendy Hogg of Vancouver and Cheryl Gibson of Edmonton all qualified for tonight's 100-metre backstroke final.

"That's an historic event, Canada having three swimmers in the final," said Canadian coach Deryk Snelling. "I am very proud of our women.

"There's a tremendous amount of pressure out there. But I think our girls have handled it very well. In fact, I think it was the Americans who couldn't take it in the backstroke tonight."

Garapick won her semi-final heat in 1:03.75, the second-fastest qualifying time, after a tight race with Hogg, who finished third in 1:04.17 and East German Antje Stille, second in 1:03.94.

The fastest qualifier was highly-favored Ulrike Richter of East Germany, who won her semi-final in 1:02.39. That lowered the Olympic record of 1:03.28 set in the morning heats by Garapick.

Smith's sister Trish also will be in an Olympic final Saturday as a member of the Canadian coxless pair in rowing competition.

The other Canadian medal — also a bronze—came from the women's swimming team in Sunday's 4x100 medley relay.

World-record performances have been provided wholesale at the Games. In three days, eight of the nine events completed have produced world marks.

The American men, also unbeaten since the Games began, added two Tuesday night in the 100-metre breaststroke and 1,500 freestyle.

Olympic records hardly seemed worth mentioning. Brian Goodell, the 1,500 winner, reduced the Games mark by 18.34 seconds with his time of 15 minutes 2.40 seconds, clipping more than four seconds off his own world mark in the process.

John Hencken, who had equalled and then broken his own world breaststroke record in Monday's heats and semi-finals, chipped another half-second off it in the final, which he won in 1:03.11.

Graham Smith of Edmonton, the second-fastest semi-finalist in the breaststroke, was second halfway through the final, but finished fourth behind David Wilkie of Britain and Arvidas Iuozaytis of the Soviet Union, missing the bronze by three hundredths of a second.

The times were 1:03.43 for Wilkie, 1:04.23 for Iuozaytis and 1:04.26 for Smith.

Jennifer Chandler, who had led all the way, captured another U.S. gold in women's springboard diving, in which all three Canadian entrants failed to reach the final round.

Hans Dieter Grunke claimed another East German gold medal as he cycled to victory in the 1,000-metre time trial. He was the 1975 world champion in the event.

Jocelyn Lovell of Toronto, regarded as a medal threat in the competition, disappointed the partisan crowd by finishing 13th.

Another Canadian hope for a medal faded in the three-day trapshooting competition, won in a close finish by Don Haldeman of the U.S.

John Primrose of Edmonton, who had been second after the first day's shooting and fourth before the final round, faded to seventh place as Haldeman came from behind to edge Armando Silva Marques of Portugal by a single point.

Susan Nattrass of Hamilton, also a contender after the first day, finished in 25th place.

Nikolai Kolesnikov gave the Soviet Union its second gold medal in weightlifting in the featherweight division, upsetting the 1975 world champion, Georgi Todorov of Bulgaria.

After the competition, the Russian went on to set a world record in the jerk with a lift of 355 pounds.

Japan won its fifth consecutive Olympic title in men's team gymnastics over the Soviet Union and East Germany.

Two Canadian boxers, flyweight Ian Clyde of Montreal and featherweight Chris Ius of Vancouver, moved into the second round without striking a blow. Both had been drawn against African fighters who failed to appear because of their countries' withdrawal from the Games.

Light-flyweight Mitch Kawasaki was the only Canadian winner on the first day of competition in Greco-Roman wrestling.

The Canadian field hockey team defeated Argentina 3-1 for its first victory in Olympic competition since 1964.

The Canadian water polo team, already out of medal contention, completed its preliminary round with a 6-5 victory over Austria in another roundrobin competition to decide the bottom placings.

Our Gals Thumped; U.S. Men Get Scare

MONTREAL (CP) — The Canadian entry in the Olympic women's basketball tournament played a little better Tuesday morning, but still managed to lose by a lopsided score.

The Canadians, who dropped a 115-51 verdict to the Soviet Union Monday, were trounced 121-89 by Japan, the only team expected to give the Soviets much of a challenge in the first-ever Olympic women's tournament.

In other action Tuesday, the United States held off Bulgaria and posted a 95-79 victory while the Soviet women turned back Czechoslovakia 88-75.

Tonight, the unbeaten Canada men's team goes up against the Soviet Union, favored to retain the gold medal it won in Munich.

In men's play Tuesday, the United States edged Puerto Rico 95-94, Yugoslavia trimmed Czechoslovakia 99-81 and Egypt forfeited to Italy.

Butch Lee, a teenage American attending Marquette University, who was bypassed by the U.S. Olympic selection committee in favor of three of his college teammates, scored 35 points for the heavy-underdog Puerto Ricans. The effort, however, fell one point short of handing the Americans only their second defeat in the 36-year basketball history of the Games.

Lee, who scored only 17 points in the Puerto Ricans' embarrassing 34-63 loss to Yugoslavia in the opening game of the tournament, played the entire way against the heavily-favored Americans and nine of his baskets gave Puerto Rico different leads over the U.S.

The Americans charged in the final five minutes when Adrian Dantley, Quinn Buckner and Phil Ford took turns scoring points and holding together the American composure in front of 4800 stunned fans.

Dantley tipped in a shot by Buckner with 33 seconds remaining and Ford was sent to the free throw line with 18 seconds left when the officials whistled an offensive charge on Lee. Ford converted both shots, but Neftali Rivera came right back down court with a drive of his own with three seconds left to pull the Puerto Ricans again within one before time ran out.

Nissalke Flays Ref's Decision

MONTREAL (UPI) — Puerto Rican basketball coach Tom Nissalke said a referee's decision to give American center Mitch Kupchak an extra free throw late in the United States' 95-94 Olympic win over Puerto Rico Tuesday was "one of the stupidest calls ever made."

With 7:46 left in the game and Puerto Rico ahead 78-73 Kupchak was fouled and awarded two free throws. After Kupchak missed his first shot, Canadian referee Al Rae said a Puerto Rican player had distracted the former University of North Carolina star and awarded him another shot. Kupchak made two free throws and cut the Puerto Rican lead to three.

"I was so stunned by the ineptness of the call, I'm not even sure what we supposedly did, and neither are our players because none of them did anything wrong," said Nissalke. "That was one of the stupidest calls ever made. It had a big effect on the outcome of the game and was just plain stupid."

Revenge Is Sweet

MONTREAL (CP) — Canada's field hockey team enjoyed the sweet taste of revenge at the Olympics Tuesday, defeating Argentina 3-1 in their first confrontation since the South Americans beat the Canadians 1-0 in the Pan-American Games final last October.

"We thought it was our turn and decided to stick it to them," said fullback Dave Bissett of Surrey, B.C. "There was great satisfaction in beating them."

Canada's victory after a 3-0 loss to Australia in its opening game in Group A competition brings it closer to its goal for the Olympics — finishing as high as eighth place. A victory over Malaysia, a team Canada has beaten in the past, would just about assure that.

"We think we can do it," said halfback Peter Motzek of Delta, B.C.

Team captain Alan Hobkirk, a Rhodes Scholar from Vancouver, played a magnificent game, scoring the first goal at a penalty corner after 20 minutes.

Inside right Reginald Plummer of Ottawa made it 2-0 at 30 minutes when he caught a rebound off an Argentina defender's boot and flicked it into the net. Inside left Fred Hoos of Calgary made it 3-0 in the 44th minutes with a field goal before Argentina got its only goal from fullback Jorge Sabbione at a penalty corner in the 60th minute.

A ROBBERY! WHAT ELSE IS NEW?

OTTAWA (CP) — Members of the British Olympic canoeing team weren't too surprised to find that $419 had been stolen from a transport trailer they were storing their gear in while training here.

The team was also robbed last year at Belgrade during the world canoeing championships and at St. Moritz while training for the Munich Olympics in 1972.

Team manager Ron Emes said Tuesday the team was appealing to the thief to return the money.

POLICE NAB 40 SCALPERS

MONTREAL (CP) — Forty persons have been arrested since the Olympics began last weekend for selling tickets to Games events without a municipal permit, a city police spokesman said Tuesday.

The offenders will appear shortly in municipal court, the spokesman said.

City Rower Gains Semi-Final in Pairs

MONTREAL (CP) — Canada qualified two crews Tuesday -- the four and the pair — for the semi-finals in men's rowing. The four placed second and the pair third.

The Canadian eight rowed a fourth, the cox pair a fourth and the quad a fifth. The eight and the quad go to the petit finals Sunday while the cox pair is eliminated.

The four and pair, in qualifying, row semi-finals Friday. There, the first three in each go to the final and the last three to the petit final.

The pair of Mike Neary of Victoria and Brian Love of Toronto rowed to qualify. Holland won in 6:55.37 with Great Britain second and Canada third in 6:56.91. Another 10 seconds was Australia, Denmark and Brazil, all eliminated.

"We only rowed to qualify," said Neary afterwards. "We played it safe. Now we're back in and looking forward to the semis."

The four is Brian Dick and Andy Vanruyven of St. Catharines, Phil Monckton of London and stroke Ian Gordon of Burnaby.

Once It Was Fun

MONTREAL (AP) — Romania's Nadia Comaneci is the world's Olympic darling but she also is a tired little girl of 14, embarrassed by all the attention she is getting—and homesick.

"I want to go home," the doll-like gymnastics marvel replied when asked if she planned to follow her Montreal adventure with an exhibition trip around the world.

She also said that gymnastics, which were "fun—like a game," when she started at the age of seven, had now become very demanding.

"It is work."

She never idolized—or copied—Russia's Olga Korbut. If she has an idol at all it is Alain Delon, the French movie actor. She enjoys school, specializes in the French and English languages but likes French best.

She dislikes to answer questions in English. Her favorite English words are hamburger and Okay.

These were a few of the tidbits that emerged from Nadia's first in-depth news conference since arriving in Montreal and capturing the hearts of spectators and the world's television millions with her fawn-like grace, daring and childish charm.

She appeared timid when she was ushered into a room adjacent to the Romanian headquarters at the Olympic Village and was immediately surrounded by news and cameramen, with shutters snapping and bulbs flashing.

She looked like a little girl who was desperately anxious to run away and play. She even admitted this to be true.

"I came here prepared to do gymnastics, not to be interviewed," she said when asked if the situation made her uncomfortable.

Nadia sat beneath a portrait of the Romanian president, Nicolaw Ceauescu, framed by bright tapestries and Romanian flags. Questions were asked in several languages, mostly English and French, and translated by an interpreter.

One British television man asked Nadia if she would please say someting to Britain in English.

Nadia pondered a moment, blushed for the first time and replied:

"I would prefer to say it in French."

She said she was seven when she entered her first gymnastics class and showed so much promise that she was picked for special instruction.

A sprite of a child, the five-foot, 88-pound Romanian has electrified galleries with her brilliant performances on the bars and beam, scoring unprecedented perfect scores of 10 in three exercises.

The crowds at the Montreal Forum have been going wild every time she does a routine.

Someone asked if she was affected by the noise of the crowd and what were her reactions.

"I think so much of what I must do, I do not hear the crowd," she said. But of the ovations she has received afterward.

"I feel fine — it makes me very happy."

Her voice was so soft, it was almost inaudible.

Kevin: What Else?

Kevin Alexander came up with four goals and two assists Tuesday night to spark Victoria McDonalds to a 16-8 win over New Westminster Junior Salmonbellies and claim another record in the Western Canada Junior Lacrosse League.

Playing before 935 fans at Esquimalt Sports Centre, Alexander boosted his assist mark to 103 for the season, two more than the record set last season by clubmate Bob Cool.

The high-scoring Baker also holds the league records for goals and points.

Cool, second to Alexander in scoring, is also close to surpassing his old record.

He came up with two goals and six assists Tuesday to bring his season total to 59 goals and 100 assists.

New Westminster remained close to Bakers for two periods, trailing 3-1 after the first frame and 8-6 after the second, but the Victoria club managed to explode for eight goals in the final period.

Al Radley blocked 41 shots while coming up with a strong goaltending effort for Victoria and was particularly outstanding in the second period when bakers played shorthanded for seven minutes.

Dave Lowden of Victoria and Greg Steeden of New Westminster tangled at 5:36 of the middle frame and Lowden picked up two majors, two minors and a 10-minute misconduct while Steeden was tagged with two minors and a 10-minute misconduct.

Other top scorers for Victoria were Scott Browning, Tej Labh and John Entzminger with two goals each. Singles were added by Steve Buckley, Jerry Cadwallader, Mike Bryson and Jeff Whitney-Griffiths, who was picked up from the Vancouver Island Junior "B" League.

Tom Killick, Rod Septka and Ivan Tuura, each scored two goals for New Westminster. Steeden and Mario Govordin scored one each.

The win moved the McDonalds three points ahead of Burnaby Cablevision in first place.

Irish Can Clinch It

New Westminster Salmonbellies extended an unbeaten streak to 10 games by defeating Vancouver Burrards 12-8 in a Western Lacrosse Association game Tuesday night in Richmond but league-leading Victoria Shamrocks can clinch the title with a victory over visiting Nanaimo Timbermen tonight at Memorial Arena.

Shamrocks are six points ahead of Salmonbellies and have three games remaining in the regular schedule to New Westminsters two.

In another development Tuesday, Shamrock coach Nirmal Dillon announced that high-scoring Ron MacNeil will be missing from the club for the remainder of the regular schedule. Out-of-town job commitments will keep MacNeil away until the playoffs.

Dillon said either Tom Black or Jeevan Dhillon will replace MacNeil on the unit with Jerry Kustaski, Charn Dhillon, Peter Rushton and Mike Walsh.

Game time tonight is 8.

Playing before 2,355 fans, the Salmonbellies got four goals and four assists from Brian Tasker, the league's leading scorer with 129 points. His sidekick and older brother, Bob Tasker, got five goals and one assist.

Their totals included four power-play goals by Bob and two by Brian, who handled the ball on the man advantage situation almost like it was on a string.

Veteran goalie Joe Comeau handled everything that the Burrards threw at him.

Comeau stopped 37 shots Evans blocked 33 but Evans, who has had knee trouble in the past, couldn't move from side-to-side on the power plays.

Chuck Medhurst had two goals for New Westminster and Jim Johnston had one.

Bill Rawson, Dave Tasker, Mike Smith, Pat Differ, Ron Pinder and Al Gordaneer scored singles while Doug Hayes got two for Vancouver.

THEY'LL BE BREAKERS

HOLLYWOOD, Fla. (AP) — General manager Glenn Sonmor says he wanted the transplanted Cleveland Crusaders to have a name identifiable with the Sunshine State so they'll be known as the Florida Breakers.

The World Hockey Association team moved to Hollywood after continuing financial problems and low attendance in Cleveland.

Larkin's Acid Tongue Flays Fisheries Program

"When it comes to getting all dressed up with no place to go, the federal government is in a class by itself."

Dr. Peter Larkin, professor of animal resource ecology at the University of British Columbia, appeared in his best vitriolic form during a speech at the recent annual meeting of the Fisheries Council of Canada.

No lover of governmental bureaucracy, Larkin strongly criticized the national fisheries research program and also managed to send a few stray barbs flying in other related directions.

"The kind of scientific research in fisheries management that we practice today is largely concerned with explaining why we don't catch fish.

"The scientific knowledge that is available is sufficient that if we put it into practice, we could double the quantities of fish that we now catch.

"Most of the research effort now goes toward setting up regulations and rules. If you know a good way of catching fish, it is made illegal," Larkin submitted.

While admitting that the first few benefits of the federal-provincial salmonid enhancement program will start coming in within four years from this year's pilot projects, Larkin is afraid the overall thrust of the scheme may be less than anticipated.

"It makes me feel uncomfortable to see the federal and provincial governments embarking on a $300 million program, because I fear that most of the money may go into providing administrative support for a few scientists who become frustrated because there isn't enough money left to do anything," said Larkin.

He also had some strong opinions on the subject of commercial fishing.

"If we had the gumption to limit the number of fishermen, the door would be wide open for some exciting changes.

"We could take the permissible harvest of Pacific salmon with two dozen traps and a hundred fishing vessels, and in doing so we could harvest in a biologically more effective way.

"Let's try to develop hyper-modern, super-efficient, technology-rich fisheries, and see if we can't lower the price of fish on world markets as we increase our volume of sales. Let's try to find socially constructive ways of finding other employment for fishermen, some perhaps in aquaculture, and some in the public service working on enhancement," he stated.

Phils Get That Old Feeling

RANDY JONES
. . . spins four-hitter

By The Associated Press

Every time Philadelphia Phillies face Randy Jones of San Diego Padres, they get that sinking feeling as well as that sinker ball.

The way the Padres left-hander has been pitching against them this season, the Phillies do nothing but beat the ball into the dirt—then go back to the locker room and beat their heads against the wall.

Jones, the winningest pitcher in the major leagues, continued to dominate one of the best hitting teams in baseball with a four-hit, 3-0 victory Tuesday night over the Phillies.

It was the third consecutive shutout for Jones over the Phillies and a dazzling accomplishment considering the National League East Division leaders have been shut out only five times all season.

"I guess they are just the team this year I can handle," Jones said Tuesday night, shrugging off his success against Philadelphia. "I don't do anything special against them, it's just worked out well."

Jones improved his record to 17-4 by feeding the Phillies a steady diet of sinkers. He retired 14 Phillies on ground balls while breezing through a one hour, 32-minute performance.

"I am still not finding the consistency in my sinker I would like but it is getting closer," Jones said.

In other National League games Tuesday night, Montreal Expos nipped Atlanta Braves 4-3, New York Mets edged Cincinnati Reds 2-1, Los Angeles Dodgers defeated St. Louis Cardinals 3-2, Chicago Cubs beat San Francisco Giants 3-2 and Pittsburgh Pirates downed Houston Astros 9-5 in the first game of a doubleheader before dropping the second game 4-3.

Montreal roughed up Andy Messersmith for nine hits, including run-scoring singles by Mike Jorgensen, Jerry White and Barry Foote, and broke a five-game losing streak by beating Atlanta in a game that was delayed more than two hours by rain.

Dave Lopes hit his first home run of the season and Doug Rau scattered five hits as Los Angeles edged St. Louis.

The Dodgers scored twice against losing pitcher Lynn McGlothen, 8-9, in the first inning and after the Cardinals scored an unearned run in the top of the second, Lopes homered in the bottom half of the inning for the winning run.

Seaboard Boosts Lead By Tripping Merchants

Scott Sinclair, current runner-up in league batting, drove in two runs with a double and a homer to spark Seaboard Construction to a 3-2 decision over Sooke Merchants in a Stuffy McGinnis Men's Softball League game at Sooke Athletic Park.

The win pushed Seaboard three points ahead of second-place Royal Oak Sporting Goods.

In another game, Victoria Molsons survived some seventh-inning miscues to nip Juan de Fuca Builders 7-6 at Central Park.

Milsons committed three errors and allowed Builders to score two runs without the benefit of a hit in the seventh. Mike Penner had a chance to tie the game when Mick Christensen grounded out but was tagged out after missing home plate in an attempt to score from third base.

At Hyacinth Park, Sharron Ferrill came up with her second no-hitter in as many weeks but MacDonalds Furniture Juniors still managed to hold first-place Stockers North Americans to a 1-1 draw in Victoria Senior Women's League play.

Miss Ferrill struck out 10 batters, including the first six she faced, but MacDonalds scored in the fourth inning on a base-on-balls, a wild pitch and an error.

Terry McKinnon scored the lone Stocker run in the third inning when she reached base on an error and came home on a double by Laury Grimston.

GSV Combos, who won the Victoria senior "C" title in unbeaten fashion at the weekend, bumped CJVI Vicettes 12-2 in the other game.

In Sidney Men's Association play at Sanscha Park, Al Stewart pitched a five-hitter and bashed out a two-run homer as Travelodge defeated Seaboard Properties, 4-2.

At Heywood Park, Ray Beverage hurled a three-hitter and Flay Hall drove in three runs with a single and a homer to spark Capital Builders to a 7-1 victory over Taylor House Moving in a Heywood Men's League tussle.

Gordon Head Cosmopolitans received some "gifts" from opposing pitchers Tuesday night and went on to eliminate Esquimalt-Victoria 17-6 in a Greater Victoria Babe Ruth (14 and 15-year-old) baseball championship tournament at Bullen Park.

Outhit 8-6 by Esquimalt-Victoria, Cosmos took advantage of numerous bases-on-balls to collect the victory and advance against Layritz in another losers' bracket game of the double-loss elimination tourney tonight at 6:15.

Brian Martin set the pace for Cosmos with a two-run triple and Robin Neeland duplicated the feat for Esquimalt-Victoria.

Karpiuk struck out seven batters, walked four and had two hits in two turns at bat in the game at Lambrick Park.

RECORD PRICE FOR YEARLING

LEXINGTON, Ky (UPI) — A chestnut colt sired by 1973 triple-crown winner Secretariat sold for $1.5 million Tuesday night at a Keeneland race course summer yearling sale, setting a new world record.

The colt, out of Charming Alibi, was purchased by Canadians from the consignment of millionaire Nelson Bunker Hunt's Bluegrass Farm. The previous record price for a yearling was $715,000, which was paid for a Spendthrift Farm colt at last year's Keeneland summer sales.

The chestnut colt, one of seven yearlings sired by Secretariat that will be offered at the sale, was purchased by Ted Joseph and Jock Burnett of Blue Meadow Farms outside Toronto, and John Sikura of Toronto.

Rally Saves Lions

Esquimalt Lions, who have won the title for the past two years, stayed alive Tuesday night with a rally in the Greater Victoria Little League baseball championship tournament at Hampton Park.

Lions came back from a 5-3 deficit to tie the score in the fifth inning and then took advantage of three infield errors to edge Lakehill 6-5 in an eight-inning contest.

John Turcotte set the batting pace by driving in three runs with a single and a double as Lakehill built its lead but Esquimalt tied the game with singles by Kevin Campbell and Murray Klassen, a ground-out and a two-run throwing error.

Turcotte began the game as catcher but had to relieve starting-pitcher Michael Hayden in the first inning. Hayden fractured his arm while delivering the ball and spent the night in hospital.

Campbell, who had taken two strikes off Hayden, hit a two-run double off Turcotte.

Esquimalt faces Hampton at 6:30 tonight with the winner advancing to meet unbeaten Triangle in the championship final of the six-team, double-loss elimination tourney.

Esks Escape Upset With Late Charge

EDMONTON (CP)— A late rally enabled Edmonton Eskimos to edge Calgary Stampeders 24-22 Tuesday, saving the Grey Cup champions from an embarrassing upset in the opening game of the 1976 Canadian Football League season.

Eskimos jumped to an early lead before a crowd of 25,269 but trailed Calgary 18-10 at halftime and needed a touchdown with less than three minutes left in the game to win.

Stampeders used a quarterback shuffle to score 17 points in the second quarter, but Edmonton used a quarterback switch of its own later in the game. Tom Wilkinson engineered the first fourth-quarter touchdown with a 43-yard pass and then gave way to Bruce Lemmerman who hit George McGowan with a 14-yard touchdown toss at 12:33.

Calvin Harrell, with a one-yard plunge to cap a 90-yard drive following the opening kickoff, and Keith Barnette got the other Edmonton touchdowns. Dave Cutler converted all three and added a 26-yard field goal.

Stampeders alternated signal callers Tom Sherman and Joe Pisarcik in the second quarter. It paid off, producing passing touchdowns to Tom Forzani and Willie Burden. Cyril McFall converted both and booted a 22-yard field goal. McFall also counted a single point in the first quarter.

McFall's wind-assisted field goal from the 45 in the third quarter put Calgary ahead by 11 points.

Eskimos' hopes dimmed when they blew a chance to reduce the deficit late in the quarter. McGowan fumbled deep in Calgary territory and Dennis Meyer recovered for Stampeders on the 11-yard line.

But then Wilkinson hit John Konihowski with a 43-yard pass to the Calgary three and Barnette went in for a touchdown from the two.

Eskimos held the Calgary offence on the next sequence of play and got the ball back on their own 35. Wilkinson directed the next five plays, then Lemmerman came in to finish off the winning drive.

Eskimos finished with 23 first downs on a total offence of 374 yards, 312 of them passing as Wilkinson and Lemmerman were good on 24 of 31 attempts. Calgary collected 376 yards, 248 passing, as Pisarcik and Sherman completed 24 of 33 attempts.

Olympic Medics Get Tough

MONTREAL (Reuter) — Athletes from the African nations which boycotted the Olympic Games have been barred from seeking treatment at the clinic in the Olympic Village.

The clinic's medical chief, Dr. Jean-Paul Bedard, imposed the ban after dozens of athletes from the retired countries continued to demand attention for minor ailments, particularly physiotherapy treatment.

"Some of them even came along requesting that we provide them with new spectacles free of charge," Dr. Bedard said.

"Besides I don't think it is fair for them to seek facilities that were provided for athletes competing in the Olympic Games."

The Olympic clinic provides free medical treatment to an average 250 athletes a day, the majority of the cases concerning muscular and dental problems. All medical bills are paid by the federal and provincial governments.

At the same time, Dr. Bedard told his staff of 66 doctors to stop giving medical check-ups to Olympic officials who have been using the clinic as way to save heavy personal medical expenses.

"Many VIPs come here with strange excuses of constant headaches or fatigue and end up getting a medical check-up that would cost them $1,000 in most countries.

"I am telling them that if they are really sick then they should be in bed instead of attending the various sports in VIP style."

Tribal Wars Split Blacks In S. Africa

By ROBIN WRIGHT
The Washington Post

JOHANNESBURG — It was a small item in Johannesburg papers: eight African mineworkers beaten to death with sticks and pieces of iron and 38 injured last week when fighting broke out between Khosa and Basotho tribesmen at the St. Helena gold mine in Welkom.

It was small because it was nothing new. Hundreds of blacks die each year in tribal clashes in South Africa, mainly in mining camps where ethnic factions are mixed together, and in rural homelands where intratribal fighting is so regulcr it forms a pattern.

But it offered fresh evidence of one of South Africa's and the continent's biggest problems: tribalism.

Far from being bonded by color and custom, South Africa's 18 million blacks are split into four diverse and divisive ethnic factions, and subdivided again into more than a hundred smaller tribes.

It also showed that the racial gap in South Africa is not just black-white. The longstanding tribal animosities that have triggered war among blacks in the past remain evident today — and not just at lower-class or rural levels.

When racial violence flared in African townships, homelands and black universities here last month, South Africa's most prestigious black college — the University of Fort Hare remained tranquil, without a hint of discontent.

Where there no complaints from the brightest, most active black students?

"Hardly," explained a black personnel consultant, a graduate of the same school. "They were too divided among themselves into ethnic cliques to get organized into one homogenous body to do something.

"Other campuses are dominated by one tribal group, like Zulus at the University of Zululand and Vendas at the University of the North (where violence did occur). But all groups are represented at Ford Hare and it shows," he said. "Each sticks together, socializing, studying and dating within the same group."

However, during the weekend rioting did start at Fort Hare, causing the university to be closed down and the 1,700 students sent home.

Almost ironically, the black consultant has offering evidence for one of the government's main arguments in favor of continued white dominance: the black population is so factionalized that it would lead to a power struggle and perhaps an Angolan-style civil war if it were given a more active role in government.

That is by no means certain. But tribal divisions clearly have created what one journalist called an "ethnic jungle."

In fact, tribal animosities remain more of a problem today than black-white relations, a white labor consultant claimed recently.

In recent years, clashes have flared mainly between Basotho and Khosa tribes, and within the many clans of the Zulu tribe. The motive is usually related to an intertribal marriage, appointment of a chief unpopular with one faction, boundary disputes, wildstock thefts, arguments triggered during gambling sessions or vengance for abuse of family members.

Anthropologist Peter Beck explained that "It takes only a small wrong for a man to call his kinsmen to retribution."

Police officials have been particularly concerned in recent months because outbreaks have involved rifles and pistols instead of the traditional weapons — "Pangas" (lone machete-like knives), "Knobkerries" (long sticks) and "assegrais" (spears). The sophisticated weaponry had lead to a dramatic increase in the number of casualties and boldness of attacks.

Violence reached a new peak in February and March when a two-year-old feud between the Ngubo and Sinjosini clans of the Zulu nation erupted again.

Five guests at a wedding party were shot when a gang attacked the celebration. Several nights of raiding in both rival villages followed, during which more than 200 huts were burned down.

Africans generally are reluctant to provide police with information, keeping skirmishes private. In fact, when police started fining blacks suspected to withholding information $46 — often equivalent to a month's salary — they collected $60,000 in three years, but little information, according to the Johannesburg Star.

Government critics charged that officials promote the divisions in order to prevent the unity of Africans that would threaten white dominance. They point out that the urban black suburbs are divided into ethnic sections to keep the tribes from living together and assimilating.

The homeland policy — which is to give tribal reserves independence and force "tribal citizenship" — furthers this aim, they say.

The government counters that separation of the tribes "according to their national units allows for easy accessibility to schools teaching in the mother tonque" and also prevents trouble.

Whoever is at fault, intertribal fighting is perhaps the most serious obstacle to the unity required to further African rights — and may tell more about the future of the blacks' role here than the recent black-white confrontation.

Halibut Catch Up

VANCOUVER (CP) — Higher prices are speeding up the 1976 halibut catch in the North Pacific with American catches ahead of Canadian landings, the International Pacific Halibut Commission announced.

A commission spokesman in Seattle said about 16 million of this season's over-all quota of 25 million pounds has already been landed by American and Canadian fishermen.

"Highprices this year, averaging $1.20 per pound compared with last year's average of 89 cents, have attracted more vessels into the fishery this year," said the official.

He said American vessels so far have landed 8.6 million pounds to the 7.4 million pounds caught by Canadians.

Jack Nichol, secretary-treasurer of thee United Fishermen's and Allied Workers Union, said Canadian vessels usually catch a larger share of the halibut stocks.

OTTAWA COULDN'T AFFORD STREET DRUGS

VANCOUVER (CP) — The high price of heroin on Vancouver's illicit drugs market is too rich even for the federal government, according to an RCMP undercover officer.

Constable Chris Picard referred to Ottawa's thrifty side when he revealed Monday that he was not permitted to buy 10 pounds of heroin during a 1974 undercover operation in Vancouver.

"Due to the fact that the government couldn't afford that amount of money, I never completed the deal," said Constable Picard, whose remark caused laughter throughout the courtroom.

Constable Picard, a member of the RCMP Montreal drug squad, was the key "buyer" in an undercover operation during the summer of 1974, which resulted in long prison terms for 16 of Vancouver's drug traffickers.

During a series of special British Columbia Supreme Court hearings in Vancouver, he testified that he spent about $500,000, an amount provided by the federal government, to buy three pounds of heroin, 1½ pounds of opium and two pounds of cocaine.

In referring to his 1974 purchases, Constable Picard said Monday the undercover operation was virtually complete when Ottawa vetoed his plan to buy the 10 pounds of heroin, which would have cost taxpayers about $250,000 at the 1974 "wholesale" rate.

If diluted with lactose and capped, such an amount would have been worth approximately $6.2 million on the street.

Constable Picard, who was closely guarded by fellow-RCMP during the six-month special court trial, quietly left town after the 16 convictions were obtained.

He returned Monday to Vancouver to testify as an expert witness at the trial of four Hong Kong nationals, who are charged with conspiracy to traffic in heroin and with possession of heroin for the purpose of trafficking.

The four accused are Wai Ting Li, 28, Wing Keung Kwan, 34, Ching Yee Sin, 21, and Wai Fun Fung, 22.

During the lengthy trial, which began April 26, Crown counsel Barry Sullivan alleged that the four accused imported 8½ pounds of No. 3 (low grade) heroin with an estimated street value of $5.7 million.

He said Miss Fung and Li were couriers whose job was to bring the drug into Canada from Hong Kong and then take directions from Miss Sin.

The prosecutor alleged that Kwan's role was to act as a liaison man between Miss Sin and the two couriers.

Sullivan said Li flew to Vancouver from Hong Kong early in December, 1974, allegedly with four pounds of heroin concealed in an undervest.

He was followed the same month by Miss Fung who, the prosecutor alleged, smuggled 4½ pounds of heroin also concealed in an undervest.

After the two couriers had checked into a Vancouver motel and deposited the drugs in a black attache case, Sullivan added, they were followed to Vancouver by Miss Sin and Kwan.

The Creative Apricot.

The Certo season is here.
Time to create your own fresh-tasting jams, jellies and preserves with luscious, just-picked apricots and Certo* fruit pectin.

ANOTHER WAY TO SAY "I LOVE YOU" TO YOUR FAMILY.

Just watch those faces light up when your family tastes the fresh-picked flavour of jams, jellies and preserves you've made yourself.
Nothing tastes so good. Or so special.

FRESH APRICOT JAM MADE WITH CERTO LIQUID.

Makes about 9 medium glasses.
3 cups prepared fruit (about 2½ lb fully ripe apricots)
¼ cup lemon juice
7 cups sugar
½ bottle Certo liquid fruit pectin.

First prepare the fruit—Pit (do not peel) about 2½ pounds apricots. Cut in small pieces and grind or chop very fine. Measure 3 cups into a large saucepan. Stir in lemon juice.
Then make the jam—Thoroughly mix sugar and fruit. Place over high heat, bring to a full rolling boil and boil hard 1 minute, stirring constantly. Remove from heat and at once stir in Certo. Skim off foam with metal spoon. Then stir and skim for 5 minutes to cool slightly to prevent floating fruit. Ladle quickly into sterilized glasses. Cover at once with ⅛-inch hot paraffin.

FRESH APRICOT JAM MADE WITH CERTO CRYSTALS.

Prepare fruit as above using a total of 3½ pounds apricots to obtain 5 cups prepared fruit. Stir in ¼ cup lemon juice. Measure 7 cups sugar and set aside. Add 1 box Certo crystals to fruit in saucepan. Place over high heat and stir until mixture comes to a boil. Stir in sugar, bring to a full rolling boil and boil hard 1 minute, stirring constantly. Remove from heat and continue as previously described. Makes about 11 medium glasses.

2 CREATIVE ADDITIONS.

Using one of the recipes above, have fun creating your own specialty-of-the-house jams with these variations:

1. Almond-Apricot Jam—Prepare Apricot Jam as directed, adding 1 teaspoon almond extract and ½ cup chopped almonds, plain or toasted.
2. Brandied Apricot Jam—Prepare Apricot Jam as directed, adding 2 tablespoons Apricot Brandy to jam just before ladling into glasses.

USE THE SHORT-BOIL OR FREEZER METHOD.

They both give you fresh-picked fruit flavour. So you choose.
Either way, you'll make luscious jams, jellies and preserves every time.

ENJOY THAT JUST-PICKED FRESH FRUIT FLAVOUR YEAR 'ROUND.

Why stop here? You've just begun!
For many, many more recipes that tell you how to turn the fruits (and vegetables) of every season into mouth-watering delicacies, take a peek underneath the label of a bottle or into a box of Certo or write to General Foods Kitchens, P.O. Pilots Walkout Over French In Cockpits Unlikely—CALPA

OTTAWA (CP) — Prospects of an imminent pilots walkout faded Tuesday as talks began in Montreal between Air Canada pilots and airline president Claude Taylor on the touchy issue of French conversations in aircraft cockpits.

Ken Maley, president of the Canadian Air Line Pilots' Association (CALPA), said that "there is no possibility of a strike in the foreseeable future."

Talks he had with Transport Minister Otto Lang and transport department officials here Monday "defused the entire situation," he said.

Maley said transport department officials indicated they would be in touch with Air Canada to "amend the wording of their policy" of use of French on the flight deck.

However, Lang said in a later statement that neither he nor anyone in the department has been in touch with the publicly-owned airline to amend the wording of their policy on the use of French in the aircraft cockpit.

David Cuthbertson, executive assistant to Lang, said that as far as he knows there was no promise by the transport department to get the Air Canada policy altered. He said Maley was told a top transport department official would get in touch with Air Canada to clarify government policy on French in aircraft cockpits.

The new Air Canada policy has not yet been introduced. An airline official said it is likely to conform to an information circular that is soon to be issued by the transport department.

Maley said the airline policy would allow the use of French as well as English on the flight deck for matters "other than direct operation and navigation in the airplane."

CALPA fears that this might allow bilingual crew members to speak French, effectively shutting out a unilingual English-speaking crew member from a conversation that might have a vital bearing on a flight, he said.

Maley said he had no objection to an all-Francophone crew having a social conversation in French.

Maley has said that if the proposed Air Canada policy is introduced as it now is written, CALPA members may again refuse to fly.

CONTEMPT CHARGES UNDERWAY

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal justice department has started contempt-of-court proceedings against another 155 air traffic controllers who stayed off the job during an eight-day strike by air line pilots at the end of June.

Department lawyers, acting on behalf of the department of transport and treasury board, appeared in the Federal Court of Canada Tuesday and asked that hearings be held in 11 cities across the country where the controllers refused to work. The court reserved decision on possible hearings.

Lawyer Michael Kelen told the court the 155 controllers either didn't show up for work, phoned in sick, reported late for their shift or left early during June 21, 22 and 23.

The department named nine controllers in Ottawa, 36 in Toronto, 15 in Vancouver, 20 in Edmonton, three in London, Ont., 21 in Moncton, N.B., 21 in Gander, Nfld., 20 in Calgary, Alta., three in Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., five in North Bay, Ont., and two in Kitchener, Ont.

The federal government sought the injunction after members of the Canadian Air Traffic Control Association announced their intention to strike over opposition to federal plans to implement bilingual air communications in Quebec.

QUEBEC VETS DROP PLAN

DRUMMONDVILLE, Que. (CP) — Some 150 members of the Association of Veterinary Surgeons of Quebec voted Tuesday to pull out of a provincial contributory health-insurance system for farm animals.

But they stressed that their intention was "not to have recourse to the ultimate weapon" of a complete withdrawal of service.

The implication was that farm animals would continue to be treated, with the farmer making payment outside the insurance system.

Gas Deadline Looming

OTTAWA (FP) — The United States ambassador to Canada, Thomas Enders, has told Ontario that if there isn't a Canadian decision on a northern gas pipeline route by Jan. 1, 1977, then the U.S. Government would have to move on its own and select its own project, according to Ontario Energy Minister Dennis Timbbrell.

In an interview, Timbrell added his own government's sense of urgency about obtaining a speedy decision on the two competing proposals to build Mackenzie Valley gas pipelines.

"Isn't there something the federal government could do," he commented, "to speed up the regulatory process without running roughshod over environmentalist other public interest groups?"

Timbrell's comments followed press reports that the National Energy Board pipeline hearings would likely last until the end of March, 1977, and possibly much longer if a third proposal is accepted, instead of ending late this year as scheduled.

Timbrell said he wonders whether, in the middle of the current NEB pipeline hearings, the terms of reference should be broadened with the introduction and acceptance of the third proposal, the so-called "Alcan" route that would bring exclusively Alaskan gas across Canada by pipeline to U.S. markets.

He noted that the NEB's own gas supply and demand forecasts make it clear that a domestic gas shortage is threatening.

In 10 Years Fresh Water Will Outrank Oil

OTTAWA (CP) — Within 10 years that fresh water your routinely flush down the toilet will be one of the most valuable assets a country can have, experts told an international home economics conference here Tuesday.

"The rich countries of the 21st century will not be the oil-producing countries," Louis Leprince Ringuet of the Academie Francaise told more than 1,000 delegates from 53 countires.

"The rich countries will be those which control the worlds polar regions, "where 90 per cent of the world's fresh water is.

Water pollution from industries and the clearing of the world's forests to create badly needed agricultural land are fast depleting world fresh water reserves, said Prof. Georg Borgstrom of Michigan State University's food science and human nutrition department.

"When you cut trees the ground water table drops and the deeper you drill for water, the greater the chance you will hit salt water," he said.

Borgstrom said that although irrigation has opened up once unusable land, it also is creating unexpected problems.

"In this, the irrigation century, we have increased the amount of land classed as desert five fold, he said. "In key countries 60 per cent of the irrigated land is reportedly threatened by salt accumulation.

Food, as well as water, will also create pressing problems, said Borgstrom and Leprince Ringuet. Both said international co-operation and planning is necessary to avert the spectre of world starvation.

"The entire world is almost entirely dependent on the weather, has a food buffer of only 25 to 30 days and is only one, or at the most two years away from a universal food shortage. All we need are a couple of bad harvests, Borgstrom said.

"Rational contingency storage of staple foods for emergency situations needs to be organized on an international scale.

Both men said world population growth must be stopped and urbanization brought under control.

Borgstrom said international efforts also must be made to control food spoilage both before and after harvest.

"Here in North America we always point the finger at Third World and developing countries when we talk about the waste of food spoilage, ignoring the toll that birds, rats and insects take on our own harvest.

"There are four billion of us now on this planet and only one-third of us eat adequately, Borgstrom said. "The hunger gap can only be removed by trebling current food production by the year 2000 or drastic realigning the animal production of the affluent world.

The 13th annual conference of the International Federation of Home Economists ends Friday.

CP AIR APPEALS

CALGARY (CP) — CP Air is pressing the federal government to reassign to it two American routes under the United States-Canada air bilateral agreement, Ian Gray, president of CP Air, said in an interview in Calgary Monday.

Gray said Air Canada should not be allowed to fly the proposed Toronto to San Francisco and Calgary to Los Angeles routes scheduled for 1978.

CP Air is the logical choice to fly to Los Angeles and San Francisco because it already has flights to both these cities from Vancouver, he said.

Under the new bilateral agreement, CP Air was virtually excluded from new routes with Air Canada flying all major U.S.-Canada routes except Vancouver to Los Angeles.

Gray said CP Air is also committed to upgrading its domestic service despite a staggering operating deficit this year and may cancel some of its overseas routes to finance improvement of domestic transportation.

Talks with Air Canada and the federal ministry of transport about possible trade-offs of overseas routes are continuing. Gray said CP Air might be prepared to limit its European presence to one or two cities.

Common Sense Suggested For Immigration Board

OTTAWA (CP) — Immigration appeal board should be changed from a court-like government agency to an informal tribunal concerned with common-sense solutions to immigration problems, says a study released by the Law Reform Commission Tuesday.

The study, first of a series on federal agencies, boards, commissions and tribunals, says the 24-year-old immigration board has become "captured by its own adherence to court-like procedures and precedents." Instead, the study adds, it should be a reviewing authority charged with protecting the rights of prospective immigrants from abuse by immigration department officials.

It should be required to make the "critical and important discretionary decisions that make Canadian immigration laws and procedures compassionate as well as fair," bringing commonsense to bear on what are essentially non-legal problems.

The study says the time is ripe to reconsider the board's purpose. It's caseload had dropped to about 500 from 3,500 a year because of a 1973 decision to tighten appeal provisions in order to help prevent foreign visitors from applying within Canada for landed immigrant status.

Now, most appeals are by immigrants ordered deported for crimes under the Narcotics Control Act and the Criminal Code.

The study says those appealing deportation orders should still be able to retain lawyers, call witnesses and present evidence to the tribunal.

But the rules of evidence should be relaxed and board members, unlike judges, should feel free "to participate vigorously in attempting to bring all the relevant facts to light."

The study makes a number of other suggestions.

Sponsored dependents of an immigrant should be examined in Canada, rather than in their homelands, to determine whether they fall into a prohibited class. This would do away with present restrictions that often force families to be separated for months while those at home seek immigrant visas to join a husband or wife who has entered Canada.

Argentine Coup Halts Economic Slump

By ROBERT COX
Washington Post

BUENOS AIRES — Shortly after the March 24 coup, army officers who had taken over the huge marble-faced ministry of the economy on Plaza De Mayo here invited their families to Sunday tea.

Sitting in the ministerial dining room, sipping tea from Sevres China, some of the officers said they were struck by the incongruity of the opulence of their surroundings compared with the harsh reality of the worst economic crisis in Argentine history.

The military had finally decided to topple the inept and corrupt administration of President Isabel Peron because they had learned that Argentina was on the brink of defaulting on its foreign payments, something that had never happened before.

When a civilian team — put together by Economy Minister Jose Alfredo Martinez De Hoz, scion of one of Argentina's first families and chief executive of Argentna's biggest private steel company — moved into the ministry a week after the coup it found an even greater contrast between appearances and reality.

Military intelligence, which had been planning the coup for almost a year, had not kept abreast of the decline of the economy. When Martinez De Hoz's advisers compiled figures to show the true state of the nation's finances, the minister ordered that they be kept top secret.

"On one particular day, we only had $2 million in Central Bank reserves," Martinez De Hoz recalled in a recent interview. Only two years earlier, the Peronist government had boasted of reserves close to $1 billion.

Similarly catastrophic statistics marked nearly ever part of the economy. The government had not paid its suppliers.

There were feelings of despair among the new economy team. But most of Martinez de Hoz's men had entered the government because they believed that the reluctant military takeover represented a last chance to stop Argentina from plunging into chaos.

Just three months after the coup, 12 weeks of 14-hour work days and many all night decision-making sessions, the hope that the worst is over brings a faint smile to the bone-weary minister and his closest advisers.

The battle against inflation — which projected 12 months ahead would have been running at an annual rate of 6,000 per cent in March of next year — is proving far more successful than anyone dared hope. In May, wholesale prices rose only 4.5 per cent compared with 54 per cent in March. The consumer price index, which rose by 800 per cent from June, 1975, to June this year, is expected to show an increase of less than 10 per cent for this month.

Martinez de Hoz does not disguise the fact that the recession which had Argentina in its grasp in March, although the population was unaware of it because the country was swimming in a sea of money cranked out by the mint, has helped to bring inflation under control much earlier than expected.

The other major factor in saying Argentina from the kind of hyper-inflation that Germany experienced in the 1920s was a daring price policy allied with tough wage restraints.

Strict price controls imposed by the Peronist administration had resulted in a flourishing black market created by the scarcity of even the most basic products. Forced to sell products at less than it cost to manufacture them, companies resorted to all kinds of ruses to stay in business.

Phony distributing companies were created which essentially funnelled goods into the black market or abroad. A huge parallel economy grew up in contraband and "under the counter" sales. Adroit, unscrupulous businessmen made huge fortunes, while established companies which refused to deal illegitimately reported continuous losses and cut down production.

Martinez de Hoz, trusting as he says "in simple economic laws," decided to free all prices.

"I don't mind tell you that some of my secretaries of state were very, very scared. They feared that prices might rocket." But an appeal to the responsibility of business worked.

Although prices did rise initially — to get to profitable levels and adjust to a 70 per cent devaluation and a 20 per cent wage increase decreed just before the coup — competition in a market reduced by a tough recession is bringing prices down again.

Money, which people almost threw away in their desire to beat inflation by saving nothing and spending everything on durable goods, is regaining some intrinsic value. Argentines are again shopping around for bargains. Outside banks, enormous lines form with people eager to put their money into bonds with cost of living escalators.

Although some industries — particularly automobile manufacturing — have been forced to cut production and lay off workers, they are definite signs of economic recovery. The stock exchange is booming.

The recession has nearly halted inflation. There is a Draconian incomes policy. Only one wage increase of 15 per cent has been authorized by the government so far, despite some price increases of more than 100 per cent and much higher rises in public service rates.

A few strikes were quickly deterred by the dispatch of troops. The army controls the trade union movement. Such repression has been effective not so much because the armed forces have guns, and the guerrillas are no longer on the factory floor. But there seems to be a general realization that economic recovery is more important than the return of free trade union activity. The outlawing of politics has also been accepted as the price of coming back from the brink of economic collapse.

DOGS RUN DRUGS

CALEDON, Ont. (CP) — Drugs have been smuggled into Canada from the United States in the digestive tracts of dogs, Vaire Solandt of the Caledon Kennel Association says.

She told Caledon council the dogs are slaughtered when they arrive in Canada and the drugs retrieved.

Mrs. Solandt said this is one reason why Caledon officials should have a good knowledge of applicants before issuing a municipal licence to operate a kennel.

"The public needs to be protected from poor kennel operations," she added.

Caledon is about 25 miles northwest of Toronto.

Acupuncture Less Effective Than Reported—Doctors

By ROSS H. MUNRO
Special to The Times

PEKING — The first North American medical doctors to study acupuncture extensively in the People's Reublic of China left here Monday convinced that acupuncture will prove much less effective in the Western world than widely expected.

Gordon M. Wyant, an anaesthetist at the University of Saskatchewan, and Monique Camerlain, a rheumatologist at the University of Sherbrooke, completed a three-month course in Nanking where they worked with Chinese acupuncturists using the needle treatment for pain relief, treatment of disease, and surgical anaesthesia. In an interview here the two Canadian doctors made the following points:

First, the Chinese success rate in using acupuncture rather than drugs for anaesthesia during surgical operations has been grossly misinterpreted and inflated by Westerners.

Second, they found no proof that any disease can be cured by acupuncture treatment.

Third, the effectiveness of acupuncture in treating chronic pain is highly questionable outside of China. However, acupuncture holds some promise in treating certain kinds of acute — that is, short-lived and intense — pain and rigid scientific studies should be conducted to see if this promise can be fulfilled.

Dr. Camerlain said she and Dr. Wyant had an unprecedented opportunity to evaluate acupuncture because they followed the progress of patients over the three-month period and witnessed 1,000 treatments of persons with 52 different diseases. Previous reports from China have tended to be superficial, she said, because they have been based on brief tours by Western medical practitioners and tourists.

Perhaps the most striking message that the two Canadian doctors are taking home with them is that those persons calling for surgery to be conducted under acupuncture anesthesia in North America are madly informed about the of Chinese patients, conscious and smiling as they undergo major surgery with only a few needles stuck in them to control the pain are highly misleading.

The doctors discovered that the Chinese define acupuncture anesthesia as a failure only when the patient feels unbearable pain during surgery and must be put to sleep. The widely-publicized success rate of 90 to 96 per cent, the doctors said, includes operations where the patients feel no pain or almost no pain, intermittently great pain, or pain of varying intensity throughout the operation despite the administration of small amounts of sedatives and local anaesthetics to supplement the acupuncture.

The two Canadians also found that previous Western observers had further inflated the success rate because they didn't realize that patients must first volunteer and then undergo prior tests to determine their suitability for acupuncture anesthesia before they actually undergo surgery.

To make her point, Dr. Camerlain quoted a Chinese professor of acupuncture who underwent an apendectomy under acupuncture anaesthesia:

"Of course I felt the incision but it was only a few seconds, and when they removed the appendix I felt it, but it was only a few seconds, and then I felt every stitch."

"This was a success in Chinese terms," Dr. Camerlain said. "But to most of our populaton in North America it would not be bearable."

Dr. Wyant stressed that Chinese surgeons usually must choose between acupuncture and pure ether — a dangerous and extremely unpleasant method which hasn't been used in the West for 40 years. Faced with this choice in China, the doctors said, they too would choose acupuncture despite the pain involved. But Dr. Wyant added, "there is no place for acupuncture anesthesia in North America."

The Saskatchewan doctor said, however, that he would like to explore the use of acupuncture in the related, non-surgical area of childbirth. Because drugs which markedly reduce a mother's pain can adversely affect the fetus, he said, acupuncture should be investigated as an alternative.

"In China this hasn't been investigated because they give their women nothing, period, and they are not interested. They were absolutely amazed when we raised the possibility."

The two doctors said they saw no scientific proof for Chinese claims that acupuncture can cure such diseases as deafness, blindness, hypertension, diabetes, hemorrhoids, "name it, you got it," as Dr. Camerlain put it.

They found that Chinese acupuncturists were not conducting any scientific tests where they compared acupuncture treatment with other types of treatment. Patients who receive acupuncture treatment after suffering mild strokes, for instance, did regain some feeling and strength after a few weeks. But this happens in the West after stroke victims are given rest, physiotherapy and drugs.

A problem of scientific proof also arises, they said, in the acupuncture treatment of medical conditions which are "self-limiting," that is, where patients would tend to "improve even if nothing was done for them. Patients suffering from sinusitis, for instance, are given a course of 10 treatments spread over 10 days. Sinusitis could be expected to recede normally over this period of time.

The doctors also used the example of treating a sinus condition to point out that a treatment which might be practical in China would not be practical in North America. This condition might prompt the sufferer to pay a single visit to a Western doctor to obtain a prescription for a decongestant. A 10-day course of treatment would be unacceptably expensive, not only in terms of the doctor's higher fee but also in terms of work time lost. In China labor is still a cheap commodity whether one is talking about a medical practitioner or a factory worker.

Dr. Camerlain said they saw Chinese patients suffering from disease obtain dramatic relief from the pain caused by that disease. They witnessed a woman bent over with pain from a kidney stone obtain substantial relief after 15 minutes of acupuncture treatment. However, both doctors stressed that it is highly dangerous to treat pain and neglect diagnosing the disease which is causing it.

It is in the treatment of pain in the muscular-skeletal system where acupuncture holds the most promise but presents some of the most complicated questions, the doctors said. They reported that the Chinese acupuncturists were cautious when it came to evaluating the effectiveness of acupuncture in treating chronic or long-lasting pain. "They pointed out," Dr. Wyant said, "that the longer the pain has existed, the longer the acupuncture treatment must be and the less predictable is the result."

This suggests that Western pain-reducing drugs are less costly, less time consuming and more effective in most cases of chronic pain than acupuncture.

However Dr. Camerlain said acupuncture holds some promise for alleviation of various acute joint pains and acute pain caused by such conditions as lumbago, bursitis and sciatica. Both doctors said what is needed now in North America are highly-scientific tests where acupuncture treatment for such conditions is compared with alternative methods and placebos. Such testing so far has nearly always had methodological flaws, Dr. Camerlain said.

The two Canadians added that acupuncture treatment in China has cultural and political aspects which further limit its potential for transfer to the West. In one hospital, for instance, they were told that the proportion of operations conducted under acupuncture anesthesia has doubled as part and parcel of the current political campaign to criticize ousted Vice-Premier Teng Hsiao-ping.

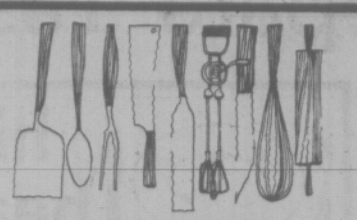
Dirty Work Divided in Feminist Restaurant

FOOD & nutrition



LOS ANGELES — Colleen McKay sat hunched over a glass of white wine and searched for the words to explain why she had abandoned a promising career in advertising and risked her life savings to launch a feminist restaurant that is teetering on the edge of bankruptcy.

"Take those two women," she said softly, pointing to two middle-aged housewives enjoying an omelet and conversing quietly. "Do you think that they could get first-class treatment in any other restaurant? Why, no maitre d' or waiter would bother with them. They would get the worst table and would be whisked out the minute they put down their forks."

Now almost two years old, the Los Angeles Women's Saloon and Parlor has attracted hundreds of women who use it as a place to meet friends or entertain business clients. About 10 per cent of the customers are men, many of whom are employed at a nearby hospital and like the hearty food and unpretentous decor.

"Many feminists have talked about changing the work place but few have done so," explained Miss McKay. "By eliminating the hierarchy implicit in most businesses and by giving women employees the opportunity to be themselves, we think we have gone a long way toward making it possible for them to be feminists on the job."

All of the 14 employees participate in the major decision, although those who are experts in cooking or marketing make day-to-day decisions in these areas. The dirty work is divided so that nobody gets stuck scrubbing the floor every day.

Another difference is wages. Unlike most other Los Angeles restaurants, which pay their waitresses next to nothing and encourage them to smile, flirt, and ingratiate themselves to customers in hopes of getting large tips, the Los Angeles Women's Saloon and Parlor pays all of its employees $3 an hour.

"I don't feel like I'm an automaton here," said Pody Molina who worked as a waitress at other restaurants in Los Angeles. "Other restaurants make you wear ridiculous costumes or walk with a silly grin on your face. Male managers permit and sometimes even encourage customers to insult or mistreat waitresses. Here no matter what job we do we are treated with respect."

Most customers are sympathetic to the needs of the staff. If the waitresses are busy, they will get their own silverware or help themselves to a second cup of coffee. One night a group of regular customers did all the cooking and cleaning so that the staff could have a night off.

"Eating dinner in a feminist restaurant is a consciousness-raising experience because it makes women realize that for years headwaiters have treated the women dining alone as a pariah to be shuffled off to the worst table or regarded her as a seductress who has come to the restaurant in search of a man instead of a good dinner," said Barbara Clarchile, a frequent customer.

"Even in the best of restaurants, women are treated as inferiors who don't know their own minds. They are never asked to order or select the wine. No matter what the woman's professional status or business connections, she never gets the check."

The menu reflects feminist positions. There are no diet drinks or low-calorie specials because the restaurant does not want to offend its overweight women clients. The restaurant serves crab quiche and vegetarian meatloaf, but avoids dishes with grapes and lettuce because it supports the farm workers in California.

Such positions make it difficult for the Los Angeles Women's Saloon and Parlor to compete economically with other restaurants.

"Nine out of 10 new restaurants in Los Angeles fail the first year," Miss McKay said, "but we have, been lucky to survive."

Miss McKay and her partners spent $18,000 to convert the former artist's studio into a restaurant. With its worn Persian-style rugs, bamboo lounge chairs and posters on the walls the Los Angeles Women's Saloon looks like a college coffee house.

The owners had to employ a few men because there were not enough female carpenters and plumbers to go around.

"Men are very supportive of our restaurant," said Miss McKay. "The biggest challenge we faced was from a nearby church which tried to prevent us from getting a liquor licence. They claimed that we would be a bad moral influence on the community."

MARY YAKUTIS busies herself preparing steamed vegetables.

Vegetable Sandwiches

Spread thinly sliced brown bread with cream cheese. Arrange thin slices of cucumber, green pepper, carrot or radishes generously over the top; salt lightly. Top with another slice of bread spread with cream cheese. Cut into 2.

These sandwiches may also be trimmed of crusts and cut into squares, oblongs or triangles for cocktail or afternoon tea sandwiches.

If desired your own favorite cheese spread may be used in place of the cream cheese. The vegetables add their own special crunchiness as well as valuable nutrients to the sandwich.

Birth Rate Down

NEW YORK (AP) — The Institute of Life Insurance says the birth rate in the United States in 1974 was one of the lowest ever recorded. It says final statistics recently released by the health resources administration show the 1974 figure of 14.9 births per 1,000 population was identical to that in 1973, the lowest on record.

TIMELY SUMMER VEGETABLE POT

Everyone looks forward to the season when fresh, colorful summer vegetable come on the market. They're attractive accessories to any meal and provide valuable nutrients as well as fiber to the diet. Their nutritive value is highest when freshly picked and used within a short time.

Following is a "Summer Vegetable Pot" from Food Advisory Services, Agriculture Canada. Prepare it just before meal time and serve immediately after cooking. Whenever possible, use the cooking water from the vegetables in soups, sauces or gravy, as many of the good nutrients are dissolved in it.

VEGETABLE POT

2 cups sliced carrots
2 cups diced, peeled potatoes
½ cup boiling water
½ teaspoon salt
¼ cup butter
1 thinly sliced zucchini
¾ cup chopped green onion
1 10-ounce package spinach
1 teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper

Cook carrots and potatoes in boiling salted water until almost tender (about 6 minutes). Drain. Add butter, zucchini and onion. Cook 3 minutes more. Add spinach, salt and pepper and cook until spinach is tender (about 3 minutes more). Six servings.

No Need to Use the Oven To Prepare Tasty Scones

hilda beastall

When warmer weather comes we may be inclined to use it as an excuse for not baking some especially liked dish, and substituting bought ready-cooked food. Take Raisin or Currant Scones, and Mud Pies for instance. The first recipe will appeal to those who remember hot scones with marmalade as part of Sunday teas; the second will be an instant hit with the younger element.

Neither recipe requires the use of the oven; the scones are cooked in either an electric frypan or just as easily in a heavy aluminum frypan on a wide element or on top of an oil range. Mud Pies are made in a saucepan in a very few minutes, though requiring at least two hours to cool and set before serving.

For these occasional recipes which are improved by including buttermilk, I keep a small can of powdered buttermilk in the cupboard. Three tablespoons of powder and one cup of water makes an acceptable substitute. Or use homemade yogurt in place of buttermilk.

RAISIN SCONES

1 cup unbleached flour
1 Tbsp. wheat germ
¾ cup wholewheat flour
1½ tsp baking powder
1 tsp salt
¼ tsp. baking soda
1 tsp. sugar
¼ cup soft margarine
½ cup dark raisins (or currants)
¾ cup buttermilk (or yogurt)

Measure and sift dry ingredients into mixing bowl. Add margarine and mix in with a large fork, adding raisins.

Have the frypan ready, ungreased, but ready to preheat. If electric and thermostat controlled, set thermostat at 163 deg. C.

Add buttermilk or yogurt to dry ingredients. Stir only enough to blend. Do not beat. The mixture should then be rolled with the fork into a ball coated with some of the dry flour.

Turn out on a board, divide into 2 parts. Roll each into a circle a little less than ½-inch thick. Cut each round into 8 wedges. Place one set of 8 into ungreased frypan. Cook for about 10 minutes, watching that they do not scorch. Turn and bake 10 minutes on second side.

Repeat with second set of 8 wedges.

At another time, if baking in oven, put the 16 wedges on an ungreased cookie sheet, and bake at 190 deg. C. for about 15 or 20 minutes until browned. They will not need turning.

Scones are most delicious served hot with a fruit dessert; but also very satisfying if filled with Cheddar cheese and a lettuce leaf for taking out for a quick lunch in a park nearby.

The Mud Pies are quickly made. They are sweeter than most of my cookie recipes but are nice occasionally with unsweetened coffee or clear tea. Keep in rigid plastic container in refrigerator and take out to room temperature a few minutes before use.

1¼ cup brown sugar
½ cup milk from skim powder
½ cup soft margarine
3 Tbsp. cocoa powder
½ tsp. salt
3 cups oat flakes
1 cup unsweatened coconut
OR
1 cup finely chopped raw, unsalted peanuts

Mix all except oats and coconut in saucepan and bring to boil. Stir constantly, while simmering gently for 5 minutes.

At once add flaked oats and coconut (if used) but not the nuts (if used). Bring back to boil for 7 to 10 minutes. Mixture should show signs of holding its shape. Add ground nuts if these are used.

Drop by teaspoonfuls on waxed paper on cookie sheets. Allow to harden two hours or so before serving or storing. Store between layers of waxed paper in refrigerator.

In place of cocoa, try a little powdered ginger. Not everyone likes a chocolate flavor. Or dissolve a teaspoon of instant coffee in the milk as another flavor treat.

Warm weather is one time when we tend to stay outdoors until the last moment before needing a meal. As usual it is the planning ahead to have ideas and supplies ready for instant action which enables us to turn a quick snack into a nourishing meal.

Make up sandwiches with fillings of meat, cheese, sardines or soft boiled eggs, spread only one slice with butter or margarine, using the remainder of the normal allowance for pan browning. This prevents too much fat soaking into the fillings. Brown the sandwiches lightly on one side only.

Remove from the pan with a broad spatula, reversing on the plate so that browned side is uppermost.

Green salad additions to complete these quick meals can be assembled on a large platter for self-serving, or small portions placed on each plate. Use green lettuce, well washed young radishes, green onions for those who crave them and chopped chives for those who don't, slices of Zucchini squash when these are available, and sliced vine-ripened tomatoes when they finally do ripen in gardens.

These ideas are interesting enough and easy enough to encourage young people to forage for their quick meals at home where they have access to good basic foods. With a bit of guidance and plenty of leeway they will come up with mighty tasty warm weather meals.

Dear Lynn and Joel: I have a two-foot-tall Snake Plant that has been doing nicely since I bought it a year ago. However, it seems more inclined to put out new shoots than to grow taller. Is there some way I can encourage it to gain height? — J.C.

Dear J.C.:

As many of you know, our very first house plant was a Sansevieria, or Snake Plant, which we promptly named Irving. We thought we'd made a terrible mistake with the name when "Irving" started sending up babies — maybe we should have called the plant Suzy or Ann. But the fact is that all Sansevieria are prodigious producers and notoriously slow growers.

The only way to force height from your plant — and it's difficult to hurry the pragmatic old Snake Plant — is to "pot it down;" that is, repot it in a smaller pot so it's completely root-bound. It's a better idea, however, simply to have patience and sooner or later it'll inch its way up.

In the meantime, be content with the fact that it's thriving and giving birth to new plantlets — after all, isn't that what life, including plant life, is all about?

SOME COLD FACTS ABOUT ICE CREAM

By RUTH FREMES and ZAK SABRY

eating right

We've recently received a lot of questions from readers about ice cream. What's in ice cream besides cream, sugar and flavouring? Is it nutritious? Is it fattening? What's the best kind of ice cream to buy?

Government regulations demand that ice cream contain at least 10% milk fat (fat from any other source cannot be used) and 36% milk solids. It must be made from a pasteurized combination of cream, milk or other milk products, sweetened with sugar, honey, dextrose, glucose, corn syrup or corn syrup solids. Ice cream may contain egg, as in French ice cream, a flavouring preparation, cocoa, chocolate syrup, a food colouring, a pH adjusting agent (so that the ice cream wouldn't be too acid), a sequestering agent (to bind any substance that might interfere with the making of ice cream) and added lactose (which is the sugar in milk).

People often criticize the regulations that allow commercial ice cream to use a wide selection of chemical additives as the pH adjusting agents, or the sequestering agents. But, as we see it, the real problem with the consumption of ice cream is not the additives. It's the food value of the ice cream itself. Ice cream is a rich dessert, heavy in fat and sugar, but light in nutrients. While ice cream is made from milk products, which are usually good sources of protein, calcium, phosphorus, vitamin A and riboflavin, it isn't as good for you. And that's because it has double the calories. You will have to eat ½ a cup of ice cream to get the amount of nutrients you get in only 2 ounces of milk. That ½ cup of ice cream would give you 130 calories. And that's only if the ice cream is the common, ordinary, every-day variety. In premium ice creams, the more expensive kinds, there's a lot more fat and that ½ cup would contain 200 calories. As you can see, that's a lot of calories for a little bit of nutrition.

Ice milk is a bit different from ice cream. It contains only half the amount of fat of ice cream — 5% as compared to the 10% found in ice cream. But ice milk has more sugar, so the calories work out to be exactly the same: 130 calories in every ½ cup serving.

As to the best kind of ice cream to buy, as far as food value goes, there isn't much to choose between ice cream and ice milk. When you check the prices you'll find that, as well as having almost double the calories of ordinary ice cream, premium ice cream is almost double the price. So, taking into consideration fat content, food value and the cost, you'll probably decide that the premium ice creams are a treat to be served in small quantities and on special occasions. Ice milk and ice cream are better buys, but they are still a bit fattening and not too nutritious, and you shouldn't indulge your taste for them too often.

Reason for Leaving

DEAR ABBY: For three months during the past year I worked as a part-time secretary for a lawyer. I quit because I felt rather uncomfortable about certain things.

To start off with, my boss told me when I answered the phone to say that he wasn't in. It seems I had to constantly lie to his clients. Also, I know that he owed people a lot of money and was constantly dodging them.

Because I felt that he wasn't on the up and up, I quit.

Now the problem is this: I plan to look for another job, but what do I put on the application blank where it says, "The reason for leaving your job."

If I put down, "For personal reasons," it sounds as though he made a pass at me, which isn't true.—N.J.

DEAR N.J.: Why not say that you were not happy with the working "conditions," which you weren't!

DEAR ABBY: I am on Social Security and have been doing alterations (sewing) to make ends meet.

One of my neighbors asked me if I would alter her dress. It had a full skirt and the hem alone took me three hours to turn up.

When the lady came to pick up her dress, she brought me some flowers from her garden, said, "Thank you," and walked out the door. Abby, I nearly fell on my back!

I'm not sewing for flowers.

Abby, dear, how would you have handled this?—SPEECHLESS

DEAR SPEECHLESS: I would have stopped her before she got out the door, and said, nicely, "That will be ———— dollars please."

Give your family our best.

Milk.

'Mouse' Got to the Prune Cake But Recipe Got Home Safely

Guest Column by PEARL CLARK for MARY MOORE

Mary Moore

The story is told of O. O. McIntyre, who was years ago a much-read columnist of the New York Times and who loved the Prune Cake I want to tell you about so much that he frequently visited a restaurant which had made it famous. He and his wife would make a special occasion of having their luxury car, complete with driver, take them out for tea at said eating place. A good helping of Prune Cake was 75 cents (even then!)

It is really not all that costly for you to make yourself. I came across it by chance when I was in Texas during the winter for I met a cook who knew all about it, so I quickly asked for the recipe for Mary's column and for you. I was given, not only the recipe, but a whole cake. How I would have loved to add it to my Air Canada luggage when homebound and I could have done just that on that direct flight to Toronto but some little "mouse" got at the cake first.

Never mind, I have made it several times since; Mary has tasted it and pronounced it "great"! It will serve 10 generously — great for a party.

SOUTHERN PRUNE CAKE

2 c. cake-and-pastry flour
½ tsp. salt
1 tsp. cloves
1 tsp. cinnamon
1 tsp. nutmeg
4 large eggs
2 c. granulated sugar
1 c. oil
1 c. buttermilk
1 tsp. soda

Preheat oven to 350 deg. Fahr. Use a tube pan (as for an angel cake), greasing it well and neatly lining it, greasing again. Sift together flour, (stirred but unsifted), salt, cloves, cinnamon and nutmeg. In a separate large bowl, beat eggs thoroughly — at least five minutes. Add sugar graudally, beating until mixture is thick and lemon-colored. Add balance of ingredients — alternating flour mixture, oil and buttermilk with soda added to it. Beat on "high" for at least 1 minute. Pour into tube pan and bake at 350 deg. Fahr. for 1½ hours. Cool on rack, remove from pan and peel off wax paper. When cake is cool, the following topping is spread over it: TOPPING — In a saucepan, mix 1 cup sugar, ½ c. buttermilk, ¼ teaspoon soda, ⅛ tsp. salt, 1 tbsp. margarine or butter, 1 tsp. vanilla, 1 c. pitted and chopped prunces. Heat stirring constantly. Cook at boiling for 2 minutes, stirring. Spread over top of cooled cake encouraging some syrup to drop down sides. For a gala occasion serve with a bowl of whipped cream.

Comment from Mary: This is a luxurious cake — one that you should reserve for special occasions. Clip the recipe now for this is the time of year for the gathering of the cans.

Contact Dermatitis

By Lester L. Coleman, M.D.

your health

I get severe itching and redness of my ears whenever I have my hair dyed. I do this every two months and suffer intensely for several days.

Mrs. L.G.E., Ill.

Dear Mrs. E.:

The reaction you describe may be due to an allergy to one of the substances in the dye or to a chemical irritant.

An "irritant contact dermatitis" may be caused by the acid, the alkalis and the chemicals in the dyes, even in those people who are not allergic.

"Allergic contact dermatitis," on the other hand, occurs in people who are highly sensitive and would react "allergically" to a great many substances.

People who suffer from "irritant contact dermatitis" are not benefited by allergic desensitization. Those with "allergic dermatitis" may be effectively treated in this way.

Sensitivity to cosmetics is a common experience. Every effort must be made to protect your ears during the dyeing process. Sometimes, shifting from one dye to another or using nonallergic products may be helpful.

Dermatologists are able to study these two varieties of contact dermatitis and are often able to pinpoint the exact cause.

I had an operation on my thyroid. My problem is everything I buy in the drug store for sinusitis or for sore throat has the caution saying, "Individuals with thyroid disease should use them only when directed by their physician." Is it dangerous for me to take these medicines?—Mrs. C. H. Y., Tenn.

Dear Mrs. T.:

Following any surgery of the thyroid certain precautions must be taken, especially with drugs that might inadvertently affect the thyroid gland.

Drug manufacturers wisely indicate potential dangers and incompatibility of certain drugs. Even though the caution that they suggest on their labels may sometimes be unnecessary, it is still wise that they continue to do so.

People with thyroid disease, or following thyroid surgery, may not be able to take stimulating drugs.

Patients with hyperthyroidism, or overactivity of the thyroid, react rather markedly to all drugs that are considered to be stimulants. The added protection offered by consulting with your own doctor when any new drug is taken is an investment in safety.

Tiny's Liver Pate Maison

Liver and spinach lack general appeal but both are delicious when properly cooked and valuable in the proper diet. Most approved food plans call for liver to be served twice a week. Regardless of the source — calves, steers, sheep, pigs or poultry — liver is very rich in protein, iron, vitamin A, riboflavin, niacin, vitamin C and contains fair quantities of thiamin.

Eat liver twice a week and you won't need to buy expensive patent medicines that give you that valuable iron that you need to stay young and beautiful. Liver is cheaper and better for you anyway.

But there is still the taste prejudice to overcome and this is not an easy task.

In my local butcher store recently, I was prowling up and down looking for good buys when I spotted pork liver at one-fifth the price of baby beef liver. Now of all liver sold, pork happens to be the strongest tasting but I couldn't resist the bargain.

Natural pork liver is extremely rich to some, so, following an old secret, I soaked my one and a half pounds of pork liver slices for three hours in milk.

Then, after carefully draining and drying the liver, I added one and a half pounds of green bacon (unsmoked bacon, also called fresh side pork) chopped up a medium sized onion and ran the whole lot three times through the smallest blade by my meat chopper. It's easy the first time through but after that it's like trying to grind jelly.

With the finely ground ingredients in a large bowl, I added two eggs one at a time and beaten well in; two tablespoons flour, one teaspoon black pepper, two teaspoons salt, one quarter teaspoon thyme, one tablespoon dried parsley, dash of chives, dash of garlic powder and a dash of chili, then beat if all in with a fork.

Since I don't own proper pate dishes, I lined a standard loaf pan with strips of smoked bacon that I'd poached for a minute or two to reduce the smokey flavor and salt content, then poured and scraped the liver-bacon mix in until level with the top of the pan. This left some over and I came up with a pair of small round baking dishes and, lining them with bacon, filled them to the top with the mix.

On top of the pate, I placed strips of poached bacon and then covered each dish with a double fold of foil pressed down tight. The dishes then went into a big roasting pan, with boiled water poured in to come half way up the pans, to cook for two hours at 350 degrees.

When done, I put the big dish aside to cool for 15 minutes, then removed the foil covers, replaced with fresh foil and placed weights on top to compress the pates and to ensure no air-holes appeared. I left them overnight in a cool place, still in the water bath, to become firm and set. And they turned out well.

They were nowhere near as pretty as pates I've been served in restaurants but the taste and flavor was superb.

It is delicious and can be served in countless ways. I enjoy it for lunch on hot-buttered toast; with a small salad; as a taste treat dinner course spread on Melba toast, Ryvita or crackers; and most especially as a late snack or a munchie with cocktails. It is a bit fiddly to make but aside from hydro costs and my time

Molded Potato Salad

1 envelop unflavored gelatin
¼ cup water
2 cups chicken bouillon
½ teaspoon salt
Dash pepper
1 sliced hard-cooked egg
4 slices tomato
1 cup diced cooked potato
1 cup diced tomato
1 cup diced celery
1 tablespoon chopped onion

Soak gelatin in water. Dissolve gelatin in combined bouillon and seasonings. Pour thin layer in greased 9x5-inch loaf pan, chill until firm. Arrange sliced egg and tomato in gelatin. Chill remaining gelatin mixture until partially set. Fold in vegetables. Turn into pan.

Chill until firm (about 3 hours). Unmold. If desired garnish with salad greens. Six servings.

Geritol Goes Under Cover As Risk to Children

Some well-known brand name drugs and medicines will disappear behind the dispensary counter in B.C. drug stores Aug. 1 for sale only by a qualified pharmacist.

One of them is Geritol, which in its larger sizes contains more than one gram of elemental iron, deemed to be the toxic level for children.

Other products which will move from open display in drug stores to behind-the-counter sales under a new provincial law include iron supplement tablets such as Fergon, prenatal pills like Orifer, aerosol bronchial relief sprays and anti-infectants for eye and ear problems.

A federal law has required products with codeine, such as 222s, to be dispensed behind-the-counter for a number of years.

The new provincial law, contained in amendments to the Pharmacy Act, was welcomed by Gerry Lundgren, president of the College of Pharmacists of B.C. and proprietor of James Bay United Pharmacy.

"For years the college has been concerned with the easy accessibility of potentially-hazardous products," he said. "It isn't a matter of banning their sale but rather of bringing them under tighter control."

He didn't think the procedural changes will have "any real change" in prices but this will depend on individual drug stores.

Lundgren said not all pharmacists are happy with the new law.

"But the majority of us have been anxious for some time to see a whole new direction taken with products sold only by drug stores clearly separated from products any store can sell," he said.

"We feel it's time we utilized our special training as pharmacists to educate people rather than confuse them."

In addition to the restricted sales list, any products sold only by drug stores but not regarded as unduly hazardous must be displayed within 20 feet of the dispensary.

"That means that while those particular products are not regarded as particularly hazardous, they should still be under the pharmacist's eye," he said.

Meanwhile, new federal laws applying primarily to the Patent Medicines Act are due to come into force April 1, 1977, and will force all manufacturers of patent medicines to print the formula for the product on bottle labels and pill boxes.

"Most patent medicines have secret formulas," Lundgren said. "The new federal regulations mean that the secrets will be out in the open. When that happens we may find quite a few patent medicines on the restricted list and others may disappear entirely."

HUNT FOR SUNK JET FINDS OLD WRECK

COMOX (CP) — Searchers failed to find a downed jet fighter Tuesday but did find the wreck of a private Seabee float plane in nearly 400 feet of water two miles off Cape Lazo near here.

Capt. Walter Muzychka of Canadian Forces Base Comox said it was believed the plane was one which went down 12 years ago. The people aboard were rescued at that time.

Meanwhile, the CF-101 Voodoo jet and its pilot, Capt. Leslie John Cox, 32, remained missing. The plane crashed into Georgia Strait July 5 and the body of its navigator, Capt. Roy James Smith, 29, of Kelowna, was recovered shortly after the crash.

Capt. Muzychka said an electroncic search would continue but officials are deciding if the submersible Pisces, searching a 1½-mile radius on the sea bottom since last Thursday, would remain.

Mackasey Vow Warranty Aid

Times News Services

OTTAWA — Consumer Affairs Minister Bryce Mackasey has the whole question of warranty protection under review and believes there is need to clarify such protection to ensure Canadian consumers are treated equally.

"We will be setting standards we expect warranties to adhere to," the minister said Tuesday at a press conference.

In addition he said his department is studying the best method for providing legislation to permit class actions under federal law.

The minister in a statement issued after he held talks with the Rusty Ford Owners' Association and Ford Motor Company of Canada, said the federal government is "stepping up" action on warranty protection.

Ottawa will also encourage provincial governments to take stronger and faster action on warranty protection.

Mackasey said that on balance he considered his attempts to assist in the rusty Ford problem "worthwhile."

The talks between Ford and the owners have not resulted in any agreement however.

The Rusty Ford Owners' Association has concluded that its best course at this time is to continue their class actions in the provincial courts, said Mackasey.

There is no provision for class action in federal law.

However, Mackasey said that the federal government has been actively studying the development of federal class action law "provided it can be done with proper safeguards, in a way that both helps serve consumer and is fair to business."

Asked why the government did not put warranty guarantees into law, Mackasey said the subject is being reviewed. He promised legislation this fall on consumer protection in several areas.

However, he said, he still sees the department's responsibility as one of bringing consumer and producer and government together.

"I am satisfied there were grounds for discussion between Ford and the associations and that there was a willingness to talk on both sides," he said.

He said he had been approached by representatives of the Rusty Ford Owners' Association to intercede with Ford on their behalf.

Associations have launched class actions against Ford in Ontario, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

Thieves Hit Car, Antiques, Youth

A theft from a parked car, an antique store shoplifting and a street strongarming are being investigated by Victoria police.

Two cameras and 10 other pieces of photographic equipment valued at $5,933 were taken from a car owned by William Wegg, 425 Oliver, sometime between 11 a.m. and 4 p.m. Monday.

Four pendants and chains valued at $1,400 were grabbed by a thief at Newberry Antiques, 835 Fort St., while the staff was busy with other customers Monday.

Dane Means, 19, from Ontario, was robbed of $45 by two young men in front of the Hudson's Bay at about 2:30 a.m. Tuesday.

One of the men asked Means how much money he had, and a struggled ensued after Means took his money out of his pocket. The two men got the money, but Means said he knocked out three or four front teeth of one of the men.

B.C.'s Schools Lagging

Scientist and teaching experts agreed Tuesday the B.C. government could do more to promote environmental education in schools.

Dr. Barry Leach of Douglas College, New Westminster, told a joint B.C.-Washington environmental conference there is nothing in the B.C. education laws directing the teaching of environmental studies in schools.

"It should be amended to include environmental studies," he said in pointing out that B.C. lags behind other countries in environmental education.

He said the department of education has left the matter of environmental education entirely in the hands of various school boards.

"There is no direction from the department and there is no financing."

David Kennedy, director of environmental education for Washington state, said the state pays for a director and two environmental field workers to work in conjunction with schools.

The environmental conference is being financed by UNESCO and is chaired by Dr. David Wolsk, formerly of the University of Victoria.

It is being attended by government officials, scientists, teachers and environmentalists. Don Dougs, of the University of Victoria, is coordinator for B.C. and Claire Tyckman of Huxley College, Bellingham, is co-ordinator for Washington.

Playground Fishing Derby

The 26th annual Victoria playgrounds' fishing derby will be held Saturday at the Ogden Point Breakwater.

The three-hour event — it will last from 1 to 4 p.m. — is open to any boy or girl up to 16 years old wearing the official derby fishing crest.

Registration for the derby is at Eaton's sporting goods or children's wear departments.

There will be a prize for the biggest fish and a draw for prizes for youngsters who catch a fish, have it weighted and fill out the derby entry form.

In addition, there will be a draw for a 10-speed bicycle. The event is co-sponsored by Eaton's and C-FAX radio.

PICKETS IGNORED

Construction continued today at an apartment site on McKenzie Avenue despite building union picketing over the use of non-union workers.

For the third day in a row, placards met employees of Crescent Construction Ltd., building an apartment at the 1600-block McKenzie.

A union spokesman said the placards have prompted some organized workers to refuse to work on the site.

MASS STRIKE NEAR?

VANCOUVER (CP) — The president of the B.C. Federation of Labor says a date for a general strike may be set at a meeting of the executive council of the Canadian Labor Congress (CLC) scheduled next week in Ottawa.

George Johnston said Tuesday that although the date might be picked it may not be made public. He made the statement after a special one-day meeting of the federation.

About 250 delegates representing some 230,000 workers heard from Johnston, federation secretary Len Guy and CLC president Joe Morris on the anti-inflation program and recent provincial labor legislation.

Johnston told delegates that the anti-inflation guidelines are attacking workers' living standards.

He said the delegates were firmly behind a general strike. "The delegates seemed to want a date so they could get out and start organizing."

Quintet's Mozart Was Stylish

By AUDREY JOHNSON
Times Staff

The tradition of summer chamber music at University of Victoria is one that hopefully will be preserved for many years to come. Lack of funds has deprived us this summer of the fine string orchestra we have enjoyed on previous occasions but the group of chamber players, mostly Vancouver based, currently occupying the spot is a fine one.

The quintet of John Loban and Mary Culver, violins, Gerald Stanick and Rennie Regehr, violas, and Jack Mendelsohn, cello, performed Mozart's late masterpiece, the Quintet in G minor K516, Tuesday at the MacLaurin auditorium, in a concert that will be repeated Thursday.

This is a stylish, vital and firmly knit rendering with the balance of the instruments and the uniformity of thought at a high level.

In contrast the Beethoven String Trio in C minor, Op. 9, No. 3, which opened the program and brought together Loban, Stanick and Mendelsohn, while efficiently performed did not achieve the same level of inspiration until the final movement when the dialogue between the instruments developed some of the illumination that marked the Mozart.

The technical brilliance and musicianship of Loban and Mendelsohn is highlighted on the program by the performance of Ravel's stirring sonata for violin and cello.

High artistry is demanded by this work which explores so many facets of a string player's technical competence with exceptional passages of pizzicato and harmonics, demanding skilful phrasing and an agile and sensitive bow.

Interpretively it is disturbing and, for all its almost frenetic vitality, frequently dark of mood and in form simple to a point of severity. The players make these properties perfectly clear with a singularity of viewpoint that was altogether admirable.

'Will Ye No Come Back Again?'

LONDON — If your name is Macdonald, Macleod, Macnab or MacTaggart, or Robertson or Campbell or Stewart, or if you belong to any one of at least 70 other Scottish clans, you are welcome home in 1977.

Next May, Scotland is holding its first international Gathering of the Clans in 25 years and a special invitation has been extended to the 25 million persons of Scottish descent living overseas.

The two weeks of celebrations will begin with a skirl of pipes and drums through the streets of Edinburgh.

During the first week, festivities will range from church services at dawn to bagpiping sessions at midnight and expatriate Scotsmen will be able to meet with clan chieftains or association officials at a special clan centre in the Scottish capital.

During the second week the visitors will disperse to their traditional clan territories throughout Scotland where further local entertainments such as highland games, whisky-tasting sessions, and music festivals are planned.

Some clans are planning their own distinctive reunions.

A ship is being chartered to take 1,200 Macdonalds to their clan areas in the Hebrides and Western highlands. The Robertsons have rented a stately home in Pitlochry.

Helicopter flights over Ben Nevis will provide another diversion, and there will, of course, be plenty of opportunity to eat haggis.

Foot-Stomping Hustle At White House Bash

OVERDRIVE was a turner for Bachman: Robbie Bachman, that is, drummer for Bachman-Turner-Overdrive who dislocated his shoulder when a go-cart flipped. Against doctor's orders, he is playing with the group on its current cross-Canada tour. If pain persists, however, some of the dates on the 21-city tour may be cancelled.

WASHINGTON — Betty Ford tried to teach her husband to do the Hustle; the Russian ambassador twirled his wife to the tune of Alexander's Ragtime Band; Liz Taylor sported a bandaged leg and Shirley Temple Black made her debut as chief of protocol at the White House bicentennial concert-gala Tuesday night.

Washington's diplomatic corps made up the core of the guest list at the white tie party.

The show began with the World's Greatest Jazz Band and ended with Ella Fitzgerald captivating her audience with Cole Porter and George Gershwin numbers and confessing she was "nervous" because she felt she was having an audition before the elite audience.

But it was country singer Roger Miller, who got the somewhat starchy audience in the mood, telling them "our audiences are usually a little looser than this but you may be preoccupied."

The guests did loosen up with some foot-stomping and hand-clapping when he played the fiddle, country style, and sang his famous King of the Road.

Later, directing his teasing remarks to Ford, Miller said "I think the most powerful thing you can do is to ask Betty to be your running mate.

Miss Taylor wore a Grecian style chiffon gown adorned with a diamond sapphire brooch. She explained that she bruised her leg while riding a motor bike. "I grabbed the accelerator and the brake at the same time," she explained.

Grey Day But Gay Queen

KINGSTON, Ont. — Despite grey, rainy weather, the Queen was at her liveliest Tuesday night as she played host to Canada's top leaders at a formal dinner aboard the royal yacht Britannia.

Guests included Gov.-Gen. Jules Leger, Prime Minister Trudeau, all 10 provincial premiers and all 10 lieutenant-governors.

The Queen burst out laughing when a photograher, noting that the lieutenant-governor of British Columbia had crossed his legs, asked that all honorable guests put both feet on the floor for an official photograph.

Earlier, the Britannia had sailed for the Olympic yacht racing areas but the choppy waters of Lake Ontario and poor weather prevented the Queen from seeing a race from start to finish.

The Britannia encountered difficult sailing up the St. Lawrence from Montreal Monday night and some paint was scraped off its sides in the seaway locks.

Idi Talks Peace After a Fashion

NAIROBI — Ugandan President Idi Amin indicated Tuesday he wants to cool his confrontation with Kenya and Britain and make up with Israel for its rescue aid into Uganda.

A rambling report by Radio Uganda, monitored here, quoted Amin as saying he intends to take a honeymoon in Kenya and Britain and to make a religious pilgrimage to Jerusalem, once current problems are over.

It was not clear whether Amin planned visits to Kenya and Britain as a belated honeymoon with his newest wife, Sarah Kyobola, whether he intends to take another wife or was speaking in some figurative way.

The radio report said Amin intends to make a pilgrimage to the Al Aqsa mosque in Jerusalem whether the Arabs or Israelis like it or not.

The mosque is one of the holy places of the Moslem religion, to which Amin belongs.

Amin made clear he wishes to improve relations with neighboring Kenya, which rapidly deteriorated after the Israeli raid. Uganda accused Kenya of collaborating by allowing Israeli planes to land at Nairobi.

Amin's relations with Britain deteriorated after he expelled a British diplomat who reported seeing one of the hostages in a Ugandan hospital after the rescue raid.

The hostage later disapeared and was reported to have been killed.

Nessie's Hunters Don't Despair

New York Times

DRUMNADROCHIT, Scotland — After six weeks of fruitless searching, the scientists here have switched their emphasis from underwater photography to sonar research in an effort to explain the legendary phenomenon known as the Loch Ness monster.

Most of the complex photographic equipment that preoccupied members of the Academy of Applied Science and New York Times Loch Ness expedition in the early stages has been taken out of the water. The effort now is to obtain a more precise "fix" on animal life in the loch. Then the cameras will go back in.

"This is a temporary phenomenon," says Dr. Harold E. Edgerton, professor emeritus at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and a member of the team. "The ultimate objective is still to get a picture. But we haven't had much luck with the cameras, so we're moving to sound systems to try to locate the animals."

In recent days, printouts from a sonar scanner situated inside the team's lakeside equipment shed have recorded many unexplained movements by objects that create a strong signal and move to within 50 to 80 yards of the expedition's floating research platform, a square barge several hundred feet from the shore.

These sonar "pictures" have had two effects. One is to keep up the morale of the team, whose frustrations have been many and whose daily routine, except for an impromptu July 4 celebration, has been at once arduous and unproductive.

"All this sonar work has been a big boost," says Robert H. Rines, leader of the expedition, who plans to continue the search through the summer.

The other has been to persuade the team to change its tactics. Until a few days ago, the team continued to hope that its complex battery of underwater cameras — including several 35-millimeter stereo cameras, an underwater Polaroid SX-70, and a television camera linked to a viewing monitor inside the shed — would produce results.

A simpler rig yielded pictures in 1972 and 1975 that, while fuzzy and grainy, showed what appeared to be a large creature's diamond-shaped flipper and a head, body and elongated neck. Those pictures, gathered by other teams led by Dr. Rines, persuaded him to make the trip this summer.

But so far little has appeared on the television screen. Of 46,000 frames produced by the various cameras, including one known as 'Old Faithful" — a 16-millimeter elapsed-time camera developed by Dr. Edgerton — only three have shown anything.

"Two of them showed trout or salmon," says Charles W. Wyckoff, a former student of Dr. Edgerton and a pioneer in high-speed photography. "The other one showed what looked like an eel. For a few days, the most exciting thing that happened around here was the debate on whether it was in fact an eel."

One explanation offered by the team is that sea life may have been frightened rather than attracted by the underwater cameras and powerful strobe lights that illuminated the murky water.

Dr. Edgerton had originally thought that the rig would act as "bait." That view received some reinforcement on June 30, when Wyckoff's wife, who was watching the sonar scanner, saw a large "trace" on the paper. The trace moved within 80 yards of the floating platform, paused for several minutes, then moved away. No boats were in the area at the time.

Since the "monster" will not come to the platform, the scientists have decided to move the platform to the "monster." On July 8, the platform was towed out another 80 yards, and the time-elapsed camera, which takes a picture every 22 seconds, was turned on.

"Actually, we are still operating on hunches," says Dr. Edgerton. "When one thing doesn't work, we'll try another."

Hunting Guide Paish Seeks Licence Renewal

VANCOUVER (CP) — Environment consultant Howard Paish, convicted of Wildlife Act violations earlier this year, said Tuesday he has applied for a new guilding licence and expects to pick it up next week.

Paish, a former executive director of the B.C. Wildlife Federation, has been the centre of an argument between the provincial fish and game branch and the federation which says he should not be granted a new licence.

Dr. Jim Hatter, director of the game branch has said Paish's licence is to be renewed if he applies for it.

The environment consultant is also the owner of a guiding operation in the Spatsizi Plateau Wilderness Park about 200 miles north of Smithers.

He was fined $1,150 in April on charges arising from violations of the Wildlife Act and has pleaded not guilty to more charges due to be dealt with in November.

Paish said there were two ways he could have approached the matter of a new guiding licence (granted annually to all guides).

"I could have appointed someone to run the operation and hold the licence but I felt that would be unfair to put someone else in the hot seat.

"I thought the proper approach was to apply for the licence myself and keep everything above board."

Paish said he wrote the wildlife branch three weeks ago and informed then he would be applying for a licence. He also said that when the government investigation started last fall he informed the branch that he expected to be treated like any other guide in B.C.

"I have had 20 years of association with the branch and I am certain they have considered this matter very closely," he said.

"The only thing I am really accused of is administrative sloppiness and if I haven't learned enough by the type of harassment that has gone on not to do it again, I haven't learned anything."

Paish said one of his main concerns is "how many times will I be accused of the same crime."

He said he will be going to his guiding operation next week and expects to pick up his new guiding licence at Smithers.

U.S. Postpones Missile Sale

WASHINGTON (UPI) — In the face of early congressional opposition, the Ford administration has decided to postpone, at least for a short time, a proposed sale of 2,000 Sidewinder air-to-air missiles to the Saudi Arabian Air Force.

TRAFFICKER GETS 75 YEARS

MACON, Ga. (AP) — John Herring, 36, former road manager to rock musician Gregg Allman, has been sentenced to 75 years in prison for drug trafficking.

U.S. District Court Judge Wilbur Owens Jr. said he would review the sentence in three months.

Allman was granted immunity to testify in Herring's trial last month. The former mechanic was found guilty of five counts of conspiring to sell cocaine and other drugs.

"The public tells me that Mr. Herring is nothing but a scapegoat," the judge said in passing sentence. "They say the person who ought to be prosecuted is Mr. Allman and all the other people who made Mr. Herring do what he did."

He said they are "overlooking the fact there is a gigantic difference between those who use drugs and those who traffic in them."

Allman, leader of the Macon-based Allman Brothers Band and husband of entertainer Cher, testified during the trial that Herring sold him cocaine and the painkillers Liritine and Dermerol from 1973 to 1975. He said he no longer uses the drugs.

The Bridge Expert

By FRED KARPIN

In today's deal, we have a recurring type of book play, the correct handling of which is often overlooked by many players. The deal arose in a rubber-bridge game.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
3 NT	Pass	6 NT	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Four of ♠.

With South jumping to three notrump—denoting a hand containing about 21 points—North quite naturally raised to six notrump. West's opening spade lead was taken by South's queen.

A count of declarer's sure winners revealed that he had only 11 of them. And it was quite obvious that if a 12th trick were to be forthcoming, it had to be made in the club suit. So South, without examining the club setup too closely, led a low club out of his hand at trick two, and inserted the board's ten-spot.

In making this play, declarer was hoping that West had been dealt the club jack. If such were the case, dummy's ten would be taken by East's (presumed) king; and, simultaneously, South's queen would become promoted into his 12th trick. But, as is evident, East's jack won the trick; and, in time, his king of clubs took the setting trick.

Had declarer attacked the club suit in proper fashion, he could have had two chances for the price of one. He should have won the opening spade lead with dummy's king, after which a low club would be led towards South's queen. In the given setup, East would take his king—and South's queen would become his slam-going trick.

But suppose that, hypothetically, West had been dealt the king of clubs. In this case, with East playing low, South would put up his queen, which West would capture with the king. Upon regaining the lead, declarer would next play a low club out of the South hand and finesse dummy's ten, hoping that West had the jack. If he did, the ten-spot would become declarer's 12th trick.

As our declarer actually played the hand, he staked everything on the hope that West had the club jack. Playing the hand as recommended, declarer could have had two hopes, each a 50-50 proposition: (1) that East had the club king; and, if it turned out otherwise, (2) that West had the club jack.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

Astrological Forecast for Thursday, July 22

By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Accent on relatives, ideas, trips, messages, being pulled in two directions simultaneously. Home base becomes brighter—spotlight could be on young person. You feel revitalized. You are stronger; creative abilities; concepts surge to forefront. Capricorn might be in picture.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Money, ability to get most for your assets, abilities—these are emphasized. Check values. Guard against loss, fire, theft. Someone wants something from you—for nothing. Know it and be alert. You're due for added recognition — and greater compensation.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): New start in new direction indicated. Stress originality, independence — self-confidence. Cycle is such that you draw to you creative people who want you to have opportunity for greater success. Be receptive, dynamic, optimistic. Leo could be very much involved.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Look behind story — check with one who has "backstage view." Another Cancer — and an Aquarian — could figure prominently. Air fears, doubts. You are in position to obtain valid answers. One who thinks much of you will prepare a "testimonial."

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Accent on romance, creativity, friendship. You find that some wishes are not too far from realities. You travel, communicate, socialize. Obviously, a most active day! Gemini, Sagittarius persons probably will exert influence.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Maintain steady pace; eschew sensational procedures. Become familiar with basic material. One in authority provides opportunity for advancement. Know it and accept added responsibility. Standing in community is emphasized through civic project.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Good Moon aspect coincides now with travel, study, long-distance communications. Be analytical. Check sources. Piece together bits of information. Member of opposite sex plays role. Exciting changes occur. Personal magnetism draws "beautiful people" to you.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Sensuality is highlighted. Vacation, holiday spirit prevails. Your senses reel at surroundings — beauty, flowers, nature. One close to you expresses affection and love. Drink it in! This can be a meaningful, even a spiritual period.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Emphasis on perfecting techniques, being aware of reports, checking legalities. Spotlight also is on marital status, partnership, ability to perceive "secret clues." You gain insights, receive accolade from one who wants you to "go public."

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Time, motion, special services are highlighted. Diet, health, work command attention. Relative in transit occupies time through unique request. Get emotional breather — organize, bring priorities into focus. Special relationship "heats up."

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Emphasis on creativity, change of scenery — and romance. Your view now is wide; your concepts are no longer narrow. You receive significant message. Aries, Libra could be involved. Finishing touches are applied to project.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): New approach to family situation pays dividends. Be sure of basic points — put across desires, ideas. Avoid arrogance. Be independent, but show that you are aware of needs of others. Leo, Aquarius figure prominently.

IF JULY 22nd IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are creative, independent, original, determined, an innovator. You are reguarded as controversial in that you do not follow set patterns. You were on your own early in sense that you were literally or psychologically separated from one or both parents. Scorpio persons play important roles in your life. October will be your most significant month of 1976, a year which featured revision of ideas about person who failed to live up to image.

Warm Soil Vegetables Need Help

Warm soil vegetables need a bit of help to move along quickly now; some that were sown earlier may be replaced with another sowing in the hope that better growth will be made. Among seed sown vegetables which have been reacting unfavorably to cool soil and air temperature are beet, radish, turnip, and, in some gardens, spinach.

The climates of gardens vary from one block to another, even from one garden to the one next door, so that all gardners will not have the same problems even though the overall weather of the Victoria area has been the same.

Reports are frequent of seedlings with only four or six leaves suddenly sending up flower stems. When the roots are pulled they are found to be few and quite woody.

These plants will be of no use, except by using the young leaves of all those in the above list. But they must still be young enough to be tender. Beet leaves which have been stunted and are a yellowish color will be quite useless except for composting.

The recommended method of sowing short rows of these seeds at two week intervals would have avoided much waste of seed (and garden space) for later sowings get more chance to succeed in years when early summer temperatures fail to meet the plants' needs.

However, all is not lost even now. If some of these vegetables show signs of sending up flower stems in your garden or allotment, make new sowings at once. Prepare the soil by cultivating with a pronged cultivator, water deeply; spread at least an inch of soil from the compost heap along the marked-out row; soak gently and deeply so that a reserve of moisture will be there for drawing to the root area later as needed.

Spread the seeds as thinly as possible. This does mean crouching at an uncomfortable angel, or kneeling on a padded cardboard carton flattened out. But the work of thinning after germinating is avoided, early growth of seedlings will be more rapid because roots are uncrowded, and you save seed.

July sowings benefit from shade along the seed row. Pieces of shiplap or light planking, four to six feet long and four to six inches wide are ideal for most gardeners to handle.

In use, the wood is laid along one side of the seed row, leaning one-inch stakes about 12 inches above soil thrust into the ground on the far side of the row.

The sides may be alternated during the day if the rows are entirely in the open, full sun. However, shading on one side or the other will retard evaporation of moisture from the soil and allow seeds a better chance of sprouting. The soil bakes and cracks less than when exposed to full sunshine, yet it remains warm.

A gentle watering is usually still needed first thing in the morning while the soil is cool, but it should last 24 hours.

White turnip, radish, beet and spinach all come through the soil within 10 days (radish in three), after which water will need to penetrate to a depth of at least four inches to give a span of seven to 10 days between watering, thus encouraging roots to reach down into the lower soil.

There is some one who misses you sadly,
And finds the time long since you went,
There is some one who thinks of you always,
And tries to be brave and content.
Gone is the face we loved
so dear,
Silent the voice we loved
'Tis sad, but true,
we wonder why.

$800 Lift To Tally-Ho Reward Fund

An anonymous donor has added $800 to the reward — bringing the total to $1,250 — for the arrest of the person responsible for slashing eight Tally-Ho sightseeing horses last week.

SPCA manager Don Adams said the donor did not wish to be identified. The SPCA has put up $250, another $50 came from Tally-Ho staff and the rest from other residents.

The horses were slashed in their barn on Blenkinsop Road, July 12.

Adams said the reward fund will be kept open for a while.

"Somebody must know something," he said. Saanich police are continuing the investigation into the incident.

Jews Arming Christians

Times News Services

BEIRUT — There now appears to be little doubt that Lebanon's Christian forces, displaying new military muscle, are receiving direct but covert military aid from Israel.

Evidence in the field, calculated indiscretions by Christian politicians, the street mood on the Christian side and unattributable statements by Western diplomats in Arab capitals all tend to confirm this feeling.

Christian fighters brandish their weapons, claiming that the NATO-style assault rifles come from Israel, and point to the serial numbers and insignia scraped off the guns and leather slings.

On conquered buildings Christians scrawl a Star of David as readily as a cedar tree, the symbol of Lebanon.

The Palestinians so far have been unable to identify positively the Christians' equipment or its source, since nothing significant has been captured. It is deployed on fronts where the Palestinians are relatively weak and unlikely to capture it.

But the Israelis also have large stocks of Soviet-made weapons captured from Egypt and Syria in the two Middle East wars.

These could be used as "sanitized" arms.

Meanwhile, heavy shelling today delayed the evacuation of wounded from the Palestinian Tal Zaatar refugee camp and the establishment of a buffer zone manned by Arab League peace troops between the Christian and Moslem sectors of this Lebanese capital.

The Red Cross assembled a 15-truck convoy for the trip into the besieged Palestinian refugee camp on the southeast side of Beirut.

But an hour after a temporary ceasefire was scheduled to take effect, there was heavy shelling along the convoy's route.

One Red Cross official said an observation team near Tal Zaatar reported "shells falling like rain on the camp."

The Christians have been attacking the camp for 29 days, and about 1,000 wounded people are reported inside the camp.

Two previous attempts to rescue the wounded failed because firing turned back the rescuers. Gunners firing from Beirut's Christian sector line" dividing Christian and also shelled the city's "green Moslem militias just as an armored column of Arab League forces was arriving.

Reporters said leftist gunmen manning roadblocks began cheering and clapping as the first of the peace-keeping troops arrived. Moments later heavy sniper fire from the Christian side sent them scattering.

A five-minute barrage of artillery fire landed in the midst of the column of 15 armored cars and 10 jeeps and personnel carriers and touched off panic among several hundred persons who had assembled to watch the move.

Council Orders NIP Priority

Before any of the $1 million allocated is spent under the Neighborhood Improvement Program in the Fernwood-Springridge area, Victoria city council wants to see a firm list of expenditure priorities.

Council was adamant on that point at a meeting Tuesday with representatives of the area's NIP committee, and insisted that the schedule of projects be drawn up by the end of August.

Aldermen agreed that the city's planning department should help the committee tackle the task, and bring back a preliminary report to council next week.

By then council wants to know whether it's possible to complete a list of priorities before the end of next month.

It also wants to know if a survey of neighborhood residents will be necessary, and if so, how that is to be carried out.

The Fernwood-Springridge NIP committee had brought to the meeting a series of requests for the city to release initial amounts of program cash.

They said it was needed for such items as establishing an office, hiring a secretary, commissioning a consultant and financing community surveys.

CITY PLANS PARK WORK

Victoria city council's neighborhood improvement committee recommended Tuesday that $33,000 be spent on drainage, surfacing, landscaping and other improvements in James Bay's Macdonald Park.

The cash will come from the $1 million Neighborhood Improvement Program fund established for the James Bay area.

Nanaimo-CUPE Commission Ends

NANAIMO — The industrial inquiry commission hearings into the Nanaimo area civic strike were completed Tuesday after 23 full days of submissions.

Chaired by Victoria lawyer Louis Lindholm the commission is expected to forward its report to Labor Minister Allan Williams by the end of the month.

The commission began hearings June 9, the day a 10-week strike lockout between the Mid Island Public Employers Association and Locals 401, 606 and 1858 of the Canadian Union of Public Employees ended.

A CUPE spokesman today estimated the commission will cost B.C. taxpayers at least $35,000.

During Tuesday's hearings CUPE requested that all employees be reimbursed for all time lost during the strike — 48 days for Local 401 and 606 and five days for Local 1858.

The request was made in hopes that "this penalty will disuade the employer from attempting to negatively amend contracts again during the next round of negotiations."

Bay City Rollers Here Aug. 19

The Bay City Rollers, the Scottish quartet considered one of the hottest rock groups, will perform at Memorial Arena on Thursday, Aug. 19, Jack Morgan, Victoria's director of recreation and community services, said Tuesday.

Tickets are expected to go on sale Monday.

Morgan hasn't yet been informed of the price of the tickets but he thinks they will be about $7.

The tickets are being printed in Montreal by promoter Donald Donald and are expected to be in Victoria this weekend.

Morgan also announced a change in date for Vancouver-based Bachman-Turner Overdrive's concert at the arena. Initially scheduled for Sept. 5, the show has been delayed until Sept. 6.

Reprisal Fears Cancel Tribute

Times News Services

CHOWCHILLA, Calif. — Fear of reprisals by the still at-large abductors of 26 children has forced cancellation of a special "Ed Ray Day" in honor of the school bus driver who led the little captives to freedom.

"There is a great deal of fear because the people have not been apprehended," said Lee Tatom, superintendent of the Dairyland Union school, in explaininging a decision late Tuesday by the town's standing barbecue committee to postpone the special day.

Frank Ray, 55, and the children were abducted last week as he drove his charges home from summer school. Three gunmen transported Ray and the children 100 miles in enclosed vans and entombed them for 16 hours in an old truck trailer buried in a rock quarry near Livermore. Ray and some of the older boys clawed their way to freedom.

Members of the barbecue committee sifted through hundreds of suggestions to honor Ray and finally announced that Aug. 1, would be designated "Ed Ray Day" in the San Joaquin Valley.

But after the announcement the children's parents became apprehensive about gathering everyone in a central place with the gun-wielding kidnappers still on the loose.

Meanwhile, it was learned that the kidnappers apparently buried the van in broad daylight.

Investigators Tuesday dug up the van, which bore a sticker reading: "Find us first in the yellow pages."

Madera County sheriff Ed Bates, who held a joint news conference said the abductors used heavy equipment, such as a bulldozer, to bury the 30-foot-long van.

"I always say if you are going to commit a crime, be obvious as hell," said Bates. "If they had snuck around here with shovels at night, they would have been caught."

Bates said he still had no idea of the motive for the crime.

"Whoever did it put a great deal of planning, effort and even money into it," he said.

The Fresno Bee, in a related development Tuesday quoted a "source close to the investigation" as saying that at least eight persons were involved in the plot.

Moped Sales Rolling

WASHINGTON (WP) — Eighteen months ago a "moped" was a low-powered motorcycle, and, although there were 13 million in Europe, U.S. department of transportation rules discouraged its importation into the potentially large U.S. market.

But now the same vehicle — an eye-catching hybrid powered by an engine similar to a lawn mower's except smaller; at top seed of about 30 m.p.h.—is legally a motorized or motor-assisted bicycle in 18 states, and European manufacturers are spending at least $300,000 a year, here to remove remaining legal barriers to its use.

The moped weighs under 100 lbs., and is about the same length and height as a bicycle. Its acceleration and speed, which one brochure describes as "snappy," are no greater than an energetically pedalled bicycle. With an automatic transmission, handbrakes like a bicycle's, and pedals for starting and for steep hills, the vehicle is easy for any bike rider to handle.

The change in legal definition by the states, which followed a ruling by the National Highway Transportation Safety Administration that the 1.5-2 h.p. mopeds need not meet the lighting, braking and tire requirements of conventional motorcycles, allows anyone with an automobile driver's licence — or in some states anyone over 16 — to ride a moped. Registration and inspection requirements are minimal or non-existent, and few laces require helmets.

Whatever the safety considerations, several dealers in the Washington area report sales are picking up. "It's an amazing response. People see the thing and just don't know what it is, and come in to ride it," said Barry Rivkin, manager of the Big Wheel Bikes store in suburban Bethesda.

No. 2 FBI Man Named by Kelley

WASHINGTON (AP) — FBI Director Clarence Kelley on Tuesday appointed Richard Held, a 35-year FBI veteran, as associate director, the second-highest position in the bureau.

Held replaced Nicholas Callaghan, who was fired by Kelley last Friday in the course of a justice department investigation of financial improprieties and other misdeeds involving present and former bureau officials.

CANADA'S STAND HIT BY CARTER

By PAUL WHITELAW
Special to the Times

PLAINS, Georgia — Jimmy Carter, the Democratic presidential nominee, has criticized Canada for playing politics at the Olympics in Montreal.

Criticizing Ottawa for adopting policies that led to the withdrawal of Taiwan from the Games, Carter said Tuesday the action was "inappropriate" and in violation of a promise made by the government of Prime Minister Trudeau.

Speaking at a news conference on the steps of the Plains High School, Carter noted that Canada had "agreed previously" to permit unrestricted participation in the Games by all countries belonging to the International Olympic Committee—including Taiwan.

Taiwan withdrew from the Olympics after the Canadian government refused to allow its athletes to be designated as representating the Republic of China, official name of the island.

WHO SAID there are no flies on Jimmy Carter? There was one, at least, Tuesday which landed there during an outdoors press conference in Plains, Ga. Carter just kept on talking.

Old Paper Halts Harrises' Trial

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — The trial of William and Emily Harris was halted by discovery of a yellowed newspaper emblazoned with Hearst kidnapping headlines in a jurors' bathroom — an attempt, a defence attorney charged, to sabotage the trial.

The trial judge ordered an investigation to learn how the two and a half-year-old newspaper got into a bathroom supposedly accessible only to jurors, court employees and guards.

The newspaper was planted "to sabotage this jury and this trial," said defence attorney Leonard Weinglass, calling it an "overt attempt to . . . prejudice this jury" by recalling the Harrises' connection with the kidnapping of Patricia Hearst.

A copy of the Los Angeles Times for Feb. 6, 1974, was found in a waste basket, bearing a picture of Miss Hearst and the headlines "Hearst pleads with kidnappers," and "vows help if daughter freed."

Superior Court Judge Mark Brandler interrupted the trial Tuesday to probe the incident, taking sworn testimony from court employees and jurors and asking the sheriff's department to investigate.

The Harrises, members of the Symbionese Liberation Army who allegedly helped kidnap Miss Hearst, are on trial on 11 charges of assault, kidnap and robbery for an alleged SLA crime spree with the newspaper heiress, who became their comrade. She is to stand trial later on the same counts.

Juror Pamela Cummings said she spotted the newspaper Monday in a waste basket in the men's room, used by women jurors because of overcrowding in the women's room, and reported it to a sheriff's deputy.

"I noticed that it was a 1974 paper and I thought it was unusual," she testified Tuesday.

"It had the name Hearst on it. I didn't read it. I just read the date and put it back in the trash."

WASHINGTON (CP) — Immigration to the United States, for the first time in seven years, declined during 1975 — and statistics show that the number of Canadians moving south continues to skid.

The annual report of the U.S. state department's visa office shows that Canada, which sent the U.S. 40,000 new residents in 1965, supplied only 5,592 last year. The 1974 Canadian figure was 5,637.

The over-all decline of total immigration to the U.S. in 1975 was 2.7 per cent to 370,961 from the 1974 high of 381,176.

The drop "reflects the change in the number of immediate relatives receiving visas," the report states.

Canada's drop was slight compared with that of Mexico, traditionally the leading source of immigration — legal and otherwise — to the U.S. Mexico's figures for 1975 were 56,141 compared with 70,928 for the previous year.

On a worldwide basis, Canada sent fewer immigrants to the U.S. last year than, in addition to Mexico, the Philippines, South Korea, Cuba, China, India, the Dominican Republic, Portugal, Jamaica, Italy, Britain, Greece, the Soviet Union and Colombia, in that order.

Immigration and Naturalization Service figures released earlier estimated that there were about 250,000 illegal immigrants in the U.S. and that approximately 155,000 of them sneaked in from Mexico.

The drop in Canadian figures began in 1966 when some aspects of the 1965 amendment to the U.S. Immigration Act took effect. Under these, a prospective immigrant had to qualify by applying for a labor certificate.

The 1965 total had been 40,013 Canadian immigrants. The following year, the total slumped to 25,563. There was a small upsurge again in 1968.

The rest of the 1965 amendment provisions came into force the following year, placing the entire Western Hemisphere under a blanket quota of 120,000 a year. Canadian immigration dropped the following year by almost half and has declined steadily since.

Non-immigrant visa activity "continued to increase worldwide," the report said, "but at a rate only about half of the previous 10-year average."

"The most significant change in non-immigrant visa activity, and the only reversal of the growth trend, was the "4.4-per-cent decline in visa issuance to Europeans."

SURVIVING DOLPHIN DIES

ORLANDO, Fla. (UPI) — The last survivor of 25 dolphins, who beached themselves last week, has died and researchers say they may never find the cause of the mass stranding.

"He just wouldn't fight it," Sea World's Elizabeth Stopinski said Tuesday. "We had him for six days and we learned a lot. We tried to save him. He just didn't have the will to live."

Ford Claims 16 More

WASHINGTON (WP) — President Ford added 16 new delegates in his drive for the Republican nomination Tuesday, bringing him within a dozen votes of victory, according to his chief delegate-counter.

Ronald Reagan's supporters surfaced four new delegates of their own, including Sen. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, and reiterated the claim that Reagan has 10 more votes than needed for nomination.

The latest Washington Post delegate count gives Mr. Ford 1,099, Reagan 1,038, with 122 uncommitted. Nomination requires 1,130 votes.

The accelerating pyschological warfare between the contending Republican rivals had reporters scurrying between headquarters in downtown Washington to keep abreast the latest claims.

The Ford camp struck first, with chief delegate-hunter Jim Baker releasing the name of 16 delegates—two former Reagon supporters and 14 previously uncommitted — now in the Ford column.

They were seven members of the Suffolk County, N.Y., delegation, five from Virginia and one each from Delaware, Illinois, Louisiana and South Carolina.

Baker said that brought Ford's total of publicly pledged and committed delegates to 1,119—just 11 less than the 1,130 needed for nomination at the convention in Kansas City next month. Baker said he hoped to be able to announce the remaining 11 later this week and offered to make the complete list of Ford-pledged delegates public at that time. "We are not blowing smoke," he said.

Baker added that he did "not believe" the counter-claim, made Monday by Reagan campaign chairman John Sears, that the former California governor already had 1,140 votes.

U.S. Economy Still Rising Despite Lagging Quarter

WASHINGTON (WP) — Economic growth slowed sharply in the second three months of the year, the U.S. government reported Tuesday, but economists said the 15-month-old economic recovery does not appear to be running out of steam.

As measured by the so-called real Gross National Product, the broadest gauge of economic output that analysts have, the economy expanded at an annual rate of 4.4 per cent during April, May and June, less than half as fast as the 9.2 per cent it grew during the first three months of the year.

The Commerce Department also reported a slight speed-up in inflation. It was running at an annual rate of 3.2 per cent in the first quarter and 4.7 per cent in the second.

The Commerce Department's chief economist John W. Kendrick said that despite the slowdown in growth, there is "nothing in these numbers to cause serious alarm. Economic growth is continuing at a moderately strong pace."

He said there are indications, especially a rising sales rate, that growth will be faster in the final half of the year than in the second quarter.

B.C. Bigoted on Quebec: Lewis

VANCOUVER (CP) — David Lewis said Tuesday he finds in British Columbia a vast ignorance of the "French fact" and an "immense, bigoted intolerance" of the attempt by French-Canadians to maintain their language and culture.

In a speech, the former national New-Democratic Party leader said that British Columbians tend to "blame everything on Ontario and Quebec," the power centres of Canada.

While they may criticize Ontario, he said, they don't like doing it too much because they realize that the people of Ontario speak English, just like the people of B.C. It's difficult to be too critical of people who speak the same language.

But when it comes to Quebec, the people there don't speak B.C.'s language, and when someone doesn't do that, it's all the easier to attack, he said.

Lewis, who has been a visiting professor in political science at Simon Fraser University since early July, said he has found British Columbians ignorant of Canada's French fact.

Not only is there an immense, bigoted intolerance of French-Canadians, he said, but French-speaking Canadians are "totally misunderstood and constantly misunderstood" by British Columbians.

What is happening, he said, is a program to make French the official language of French-speaking Canadians — not of English-speaking Canadians.

"We are not going to have a country unless we understand this," he told a service club.

Lewis, who speaks fluent French, said he has met more "non-separatist separatists" in B.C. than he has in Quebec.

House Boat Query

NORTH VANCOUVER (CP) — The National Harbors Board has launched a study into houseboats in the Deep Cove area, located on the north arm of the Burrard Inlet, after receiving complaints from several municipalities about the live-aboards.

D. A. Welsh, the North Vancouver district municipal manager, told the district council's policy and planning committee he had discussed a complaint about five houseboats at Deep Cove with the Harbors Board.

He said a Harbors Board official told him the board had received complaints from several municipalities including the district of North Vancouver and that it had set up a staff committee to study the problem.

Welsh said the five houseboats in the Deep cove area are small dwellings, built on rafts or log floats anchored off shore.

A number of other boats tied up or anchored in the cove could provide living accommodation, he said.

Fire Hazard Down

VANCOUVER (CP) — Cool, wet weather, which spread through the province overnight, has reduced the forest fire hazard, described by the forest service as moderate to high earlier this week. There were 32 fires burning throughout the province Tuesday, a fraction of the number usually burning at this time of year, a forestry spokesman said.

Two Killed

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Two persons were killed and two injured Tuesday as the result of a car-train collision about 17 miles east of this central interior community. No names were released.

Council previously voted against a no-smoking bylaw but changed their minds Monday night after hearing a report from Bud Horton, vice-president of the Chamber of Commerce and an Eaton's department store executive.

Faller Better

SURREY (CP) —Christopher Walker, 13, of Delta, who fell off the Pattullo Bridge July 14, has been listed in good condition Tuesday. He was in serious condition when admitted last week after falling 170 feet from the centre span of the bridge, which spans the Fraser River between Surrey and New Westminster.

CHERRY CROP NEAR RECORD

KELOWNA (CP) — An almost record crop of cherries is off to a good start in British Columbia's fruit-growing Okanagan Valley, Ian Greenwood, general manager of B.C. Tree Fruits, said today.

"With a delayed season start, initial shipments to the very important eastern Canadian markets are just now reaching Toronto and Montreal. However, the reception for the fruit has been good.

Competitive marketing for cherries from Washington and Oregon is being watched closely as, with harvesting in those areas estimated to be 75 per cent completed, there are some signs of possible strengthening of their prices," he said.

Apricots, next to ripen, are expected to be shipped by the middle of this week.

Sprinklers Urged After Hotel Fires

VANCOUVER (CP) — Two hotel fires which occurred three days apart would have been far less serious if the hotels were equipped with complete sprinkler systems, assistant fire chief Percy Flello said today.

Officials were still trying to determine the precise causes of the two fires, one Friday night at the Sheraton-Landmark and the other early Monday morning at the Georgia Hotel, where one guest was killed and 53 other persons sent to hospitals for treatment.

He said most first-class hotels, including the Landmark and the Georgia, do not have complete sprinkers because they meet city fire safety regulations.

Flello said most downtown hotels are in the process of upgrading their sprinker systems but "it takes time."

"You can't regulate fires, you're going to have them anyway," said Flello. "But a complete sprinker system is the best thing we've found."

Fire Warden Georgie Birnie said he could not confirm without further investigation that a careless smoker started the fire that damaged the 42-storey Sheraton-Landmark Hotel.

He added it had not been definitely determined what started the blaze that killed a guest in the Hotel Georgia, Mrs. Maureen Chapman, of Port Clements.

Mrs. Chapman, wife of a Port Clements general store proprietor, was the occupant of Room 305 at the Georgia, where the fire started.

"We can't be 100 per cent sure, but the pattern of the fire within the room indicates it could only have started in the room's television set," said Birnie.

He said it was virtually impossible to pin point the cause of the fire, which destroyed the TV set.

"All we can say is that the fire's hottest point was in and around the television set . . . there were no indications it started anywhere else in the the room," he said.

Off-Duty Mountie Accused

PRINCE RUPERT (CP) — George Nylan identified RCMP constable Laurence Labrech, 23, on Tuesday as the man who "punched and kicked" him in an incident May 8 on Highway 16 about 10 miles east of here.

Labrech, on trial before Judge E. J. Cronin, is charged with assault causing bodily harm, possession of a restricted firearm, and pointing that firearm at another person.

Both Nylan, 20, and Marjorie Watts, 16, identified Labrech as the man who pointed a gun at Nylan during the argument on the highway.

Nylan said he was driving east toward Terrace just before the incident and realized he had taken the wrong road. He said he was on the point of turning around when Labrech was forced to stop behind his van.

Labrech was off duty and out of uniform at the time of the incident.

Nylan said Labrech told him he was a police officer and asked to see his drivers' licence. Later, when asked to hand over the licence, he said he refused because he wasn't sure the man was a police officer.

Nylan said the man went to his car and returned with what appeared to be a small black gun. He said the man pointed the weapon at his stomach and asked to hand over the licence again.

Nylan said the man threw the first punch, knocking him to the ground, and proceeded to punch and kick him while he remained down. He said he then left the scene abruptly and drove toward Terrace.

Nylan said there were about a dozen people at the scene, but he did not think any of them threatened Labrech.

Defence counsel Allan Hope said the witness may have been impertinent and invited a fight. He also said Nylan deliberately manoevred his van onto the road to keep people from entering an area where drag races have been occurring.

Nyland dened this and said his van stalled in the process of turning around. He said he had never been involved in drag racing but had only been invited to watch.

The trial continues.

Pacific Press Pact Seeks 16%

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Sun says 1,400 employees of Pacific Press Ltd. are to receive a pay increase of 16 per cent in the first year of a two-year contract retroactive to Oct. 31.

The agreement for Pacific Press, which publishes the Sun and the Province newspapers, was worked out under labor consultant Jim Kinnaird.

The second year of the agreement calls for an eight-per-cent hike.

In addition, the agreement allows newspaper workers to accumulate some sick leave benefits as savings and provides a vehicle for settling jurisdictional disputes stemming from automation.

This involves the appointment of a labor expert to referee internal disputes using a fairly new approach called "MED-ARB" the evening newspaper says in its Tuesday edition.

MED-ARB recognizes the need for flexibility in settling such disputes by allowing the referee to use all the techniques of mediation at the outset. If that fails, the referee can swing into binding arbitration.

Major technological change procedures have been held up at the two newspapers produced by Pacific Press while awaiting resolution of the contract dispute.

The agreement has to be taken to the federal Anti-Inflation Board for approval.

Full details of the contract are expected after the seven unions employed at Pacific Press begin ratification votes this week. The votes are expected to take a week.

Union and managment spokesmen did not comment on the report.

Unions involved are the Vancouver-New Westminster Local of the Newspaper Guild, International Stereotypers and Electrotypers Union, Printing Pressmen's Union, International Typographical Union, Lithographers' Union and the Mailers' Union, all members of the Joint Council of Newspaper Unions, and the Graphic Arts International Union, which represents photoengravers, which withdrew from the Joint Council in April over a jurisdictional dispute.

A current key pay rate at the newspapers is $320 weekly, for reporters with five years' experience.

Mars Really Is Red

PASADENA, Calif. (Reuter) — The red planet Mars is really red, the first color picture sent down to earth showed today.

The picture transmitted by the Viking 1 lander showed the rock-littered surface to be a brownish-red color.

Dr. Thomas Mutch, head of the Viking surface photography team, said as the picture flashed on television sets at the Jet Propulsion Laboratory here:

"It's a very exciting thing to see this definite reddish coloration of the surface.

"This is quite surprisingly terrestial-like—a pleasant scene, definitely not the colors of the moon."

The robot spacecraft has detected nitrogen and argon gases in the atmosphere of the Red planet in sufficient abundance to make scientists more optimistic that life might flourish there, the project's directors said today.

While not providing any evidence of life, past or future, the discovery by Viking 1 as it descended toward Tuesday's Mars landing suggest that Mars had a denser, more life-nurturing environment in the past.

Together with Viking's findings from orbit that water once flowed in rivers on the planet, the discovery of nitrogen means that all the essential factors for life might have been present at some time, project scientist Dr. Gerald Soffen said at a news briefing early today.

"The 'stewpot' was there to do the kind of organic chemistry required for biogenesis (synthesis) of living organisms," said Soffen. "Whether it took place or not we don't know."

From the abundance of argon, it can be deduced that nitrogen must have been present early in the planet's history, Dr. Michael McElroy of Harvard University told a news conference.

LOCKHEED DEAL SIGNED

OTTAWA (CP) — The government signed a $1-billion deal with Lockheed Aircraft Corp. today to acquire 18 Auroras-formerly known as the Orion — which Defence Minister James Richardson said will be the best anti-submarine aircraft in the world.

The deal is the largest single peacetime military contract ever signed by Canada and is the largest international deal ever put together by Lockheed.

It calls for deliveries of the Auroras with their special-for-Canada electronic package by March 1981, replacing outdated Argus aircraft that the country has been using for years.

The contract was signed by supply Minister Jean-Pierre Goyer for Canada and Robert Haack, chairman of the board for Lockheed, in a brief ceremony.

Later, Defence Minister James Richardson read a statement at a news conference, which said:

"I believe that in future years all Canadians, and particularly members of the Canadian Armed Forces, will be proud and reassured to know that Aurora, the best-long-range patrol aircraft in the world, will be guarding the sea approaches to Canada and patrolling our northern skies."

Because the aircraft became a distinctly Canadian creation the minister named it Aurora, after the northern lights.

The contract provides $697 million for the aircraft itself and much of its ground systems. Another $334.7 million goes to other costs, including federal sales tax.

Dublin Blast Kills U.K. Envoy, Woman

Wreckage of car lies in crater caused by today's blast

Times News Services

DUBLIN — British ambassador Christopher Ewart-Biggs and a woman secretary to a top British official in Northern Ireland were killed today when a land mine blew up the ambassador's car.

Brian Cubbon, the visiting official from Belfast, was critically injured.

A chauffeur was also injured and reported in critical condition from the blast that hit the car as it came out of the gates of the ambassador's mansion on the outskirts of Dublin.

At a special Dublin cabinet meeting following the murders, Prime Minister Liam Cosgrove authorized a $36,000 reward for information leading to the killers.

Ewart-Biggs, 54, new to his post here, is believed to be the first British official killed in the Irish republic since the Irish war of independence in the early 1920s.

The British embassy in Dublin was burned four years ago by a mob enraged when British paratroopers killed 13 unarmed civilians during a demonstration in Northern Ireland.

Ewart-Biggs went to Dublin as Britain's new ambassador July 8 to end the British diplomatic hibernation in the city.

The British government had maintained a low profile here since the embassy was burned.

But Ewart-Biggs' flair and aristocratic bearing immediately caught the imagination of Irish newspapers, who were not sure whether he was a genuine eccentric or an intelligence expert.

The new ambassador called a group of Irish and British political correspondents to his home Tuesday to declare the era of "British diplomatic hibernation" in Dublin was over.

He added pointedly that the black monocle he wore was to cover the loss of his right eye at the battle of El Alamein in the Second World War.

A caricature of him created from a cross between a P. G. Wodehouse character and Rudyard Kipling "just bloody well won't wash at all," he said.

The Irish Republican Army immediately condemned the killings, but Irish Foreign Minister Garret Fitzgerald said "the most likely suspects (in the killings) would be the provisional IRA or a group of that type."

A police spokesman said the mine apparently was detonated by remote control as the car passed over the device,

BOMBS IN SALISBURY

SALISBURY (Reuter) — Two grenade blasts in the centre of Salisbury have brought home to metropolitan Rhodesians the guerrilla war until now raging only on the borders.

Police would not say that the blasts, which occurred two minutes apart at a crowded restaurant and a nightclub a mile away, were definitely the work of guerrillas. But a senior police official said they could certainly be called terrorism.

The fear in Salisbury today was that this might mark the start of urban guerrilla warfare. This compact city of 120,000 whites is surrounded by black townships.

The first grenade was tossed through a window of the Pink Panther Steakhouse just before 8:30 p.m. Tuesday night. It landed amid 30 diners but only one, Andrew Craig, was badly injured.

The second explosion was outside La Boheme nightclub, which was just filling up for the evening's entertainment. A car was damaged and some of the club windows broken, but nobody was hurt and business went on as usual.

Police immediately sealed off both areas and began searching for the bombers. But no arrests were reported.

Renewed Townships Riot Claims Two Africans

JOHANNESBURG (AP) — Two black men were killed and more than 20 other persons injured in riots in three black South African townships Tuesday night. Police said the situation was calm today.

The disturbances broke out as schools closed by black rioters last month were to reopen. Posters carried by the rioters Tuesday said: "We are fighting for our black brothers and sisters who died in Soweto."

At least 176 persons, nearly all black, died in those riots, which began in the huge black township of Soweto, outside Johannesburg.

Police rushed Tuesday night to Lynnville township, near Witbank, 70 miles east of Pretoria, where 3,000 black youths attacked whites, Indians and persons of mixed race.

Police said nine blacks were injured, four by bullets, when officers moved in to stop the rioting. An 18-year-old black youth was found shot dead in a beer hall and a second black youth was killed by the driver of a vehicle trying to get through a crowd of blacks.

Police also reported that attempts were made to burn black schools in at least three townships. Two fires were put out quickly but Bethanie school near Marikana was badly damaged.

At Middelburg, a group of about 150 students marched through the streets of Mhluzi township, setting fire to a bus and stoning cars.

Roving bands of blacks stoned cars on the main Pretoria-Witbank highway and several whites, including a four-year-old girl, were hurt.

At Khutsong township outside Carltonville, about 30 miles southwest of Johannesburg, groups of blacks tried to set buildings on fire but the disturbances died down after police reinforcements were sent in. There were no reports of injuries.

FIVE MARGUERITE CREW SUSPENDED

By LIZ HUGHES
Times Staff

Five employees of the provincially-owned ferry Princess Marguerite have been suspended pending an investigation of discrepancies in money taken in from liquor sales on the ship.

It is not known how much money is involved and Art Elworthy, general manager of the B.C. Steamship Co., which operates the Marguerite, refused comment on the case until a hearing today in Victoria is over.

The hearing will decide whether the five employees will be suspended, fired or allowed to continue in their jobs.

The five are members of the Brotherhood of Railway, Airline and Steamship Clerks (BRAC), the union representing non-maritime employees of the Marguerite.

BRAC general chairman Ron Welch is in Victoria today attending the hearing.

Under the union contract employees cannot be fired until after a hearing is held. They are considered to be "held out of service" pending the outcome of the hearing.

The union apparently held a meeting Tuesday in the Alcazar Hotel in Vancouver where it decided at least to attend the hearing.

B.C. Steamship Co. superintendent of passenger services Dave Price also refused comment on the hearing saying he didn't want to jeopardize "either their case or ours."

He said he expected the hearing to be wrapped up later today.

Hydro Row Escalation Will Hit Public—Union

B.C. Hydro customers will soon feel the effects of the crown corporation's labor dispute, a union spokesman warned today.

"It's safe to say that the dispute has accelerated to the point where we don't see any way that inconvenience to the public is going to be avoided," said Fred Trotter, president of Local 378 Office and Technical Employees Union.

Hydro spokesmen said today a lockout policy launched Tuesday is aimed at those 250 or so employees who participated in selective strike action during the last two weeks.

But initial reports to OTEU offices in Vancouver today, said Trotter, indicate "other grous who have not participated in strike action at all have been locked out."

The union's first notice of the company's intent he said came when 36 employees tried to return to work Tuesday but were met with lockout notice. At 4 p.m. other groups who had not participated in the strike activity including 1975, in customer accounting were informed they were locked out.

Trotter said union strike activity was kept to areas of administration—"things between ourselves and them"—not the comtomer service of gas or electricity.

"But the attitude (in face of the lockout) is changed." The decision will made on greater escalation of strikes after "we see the dimensions of the lockout activity," he said.

If any major disruption of electricity service did occur it is likely the provincial government could use its new essential services legislation to order a 40-day cooling off period.

Labor Minister Allan Williams, when he introduced the amendments to the Labor Code this spring said the bill could be used in disputes that proved harmful to the public's health and safety.

LONG-DISTANCE . . . IT SURE IS

VANCOUVER (CP) A provincial government employee got a sneak preview Tuesday of B.C. Tel's Overseas Direct Dialing Service when he tried to phone Victoria — and missed by 7,300 miles.

Walter Muller, an employee of the Vancouver Resources Board said he was dialing a local number that should have connected him directly with a government switchboard in Victoria but instead, got a Melbourne, Australia, woman out of bed at about 5 a.m. Melbourne time.

"Halfway through dialing I thought that something went wrong so I cut the connection," said Muller. "I thought I had a clear line but I guess I didn't.

"I dialed the number again. It turned out I got a woman in Melbourne. I asked her her number; it was similar to what I dialed but different."

After checking the 1976 Vancouver phone book, which explains that direct dialing to selected overseas countries goes into effect Sept. 7, he tried a number in Japan — and got a recorded message, in Japanese.

But when he phoned the operator to make sure he didn't get billed for the Melbourne call — which would cost about $9 — he said an operator told him: "Don't worry; you can't dial overseas; it's impossible."

Jim MacInnes, B.C. Tel spokesman, confirmed, however, that several overseas lines have been installed and that it was possible for Muller to reach an Australian number.

Tunisia Joins Games' Boycott

Times News Services

Tunisia has withdrawn from the Olympic Games, the government announced in Tunis today.

Only two African countries — Senegal and Ivory Coast — now remain in the Games. On Tuesday Egypt and Morocco announced they were out, for an unofficial total of boycotting nations of 31.

The pullouts hit 11 of the 21 sports in the Games of the 21st Olympiad.

The African and Arab countries, along with Guyana in South America, called the boycott in an attempt to force withdrawal of New Zealand, which allowed one of its rugby teams to tour South Africa, under Olympic suspension because of its apartheid policies.

Kenya's boycott forced cancellation of five field hockey matches and nine of 24 soccer games were dropped after Nigeria, Zambia and Ghana withdrew.

Observers say the boycott's main impact will not be felt until track and field events begin Friday.

Meanwhile in Johannesburg it was announced that a team of U.S. women gymnasts taking part in the Olympics will visit South Africa after the Games.

The U.S. team will include three gymnasts who have competed in South Africa before. They will take in events at Bloemfontein July 31 and at Johannesburg August 7, a spokesman said.

Immediately after the series, the South African gymnasts will leave for Taiwan for a series of tournaments, the spokesman said.

News of the Tunisian pullout was a surprise.

Mohamed Mzali, minister of education and president of the Tunisian National Olympic Committee, said in Montreal Tuesday that Tunisia had no reason for joining African countries in a boycott of the Games in protest over a tour of South Africa by a rugby team from New Zealand.

Swim Team Disqualified

MONTREAL (CP) — Canada's men's 200-metre freestyle relay team was disqualified today after finishing with a Canadian record time behind the world-record setting American team in Olympic swimming competition.

The disqualification came after Stephen Pickell was ruled to have left the blocks too early when he took over on the third leg from Bill Sawchuck of Thunder Bay, Ont.

The United States team of Doug Northway, Tim Shaw, Mike Bruner and Bruce Furniss won the heat in a world record time of seven minutes, 30.33 seconds. An American team last year set the previous mark of 7:30.54.

RCMP Man Quits . . . Job Futile

NORTH VANCOUVER (CP) —Blasting "bleeding hearts" in the federal justice department, Staff Sgt. Fred Bodnaruk, a 25-year RCMP veteran and prominent B.C. policeman, announced Tuesday he was leaving the force.

Bodnaruk, 45, said he was leaving the RCMP 10 years before normal retirement because leniency in the justice system was making his job futile and making the protection of the public impossible.

"Suddenly I realized the government seems to be irresponsible in the policies they are bringing in — I can see it's all a bunch of hogwash," said the veteran murder investigator.

BODNARUK

"There are just too many bleeding hearts in that (justice) department."

He said liberalization of the justice system will lead to more murders, sex crimes and other violence and if the government, as a result, isn't forced by public pressure to return the death penalty within 10 years, "people will take over justice for themselves — I'm sure of it."

Bodnaruk said he has taken part in at least 25 murder investigations, seven of them sex-slayings, and linked the rape-murders of many B.C. women in the past two years to more lenient parole procedures.

"The attitude now is because you rape a girl then kill her, you can get away with it because she won't talk if you kill her. The parole board is letting these people out too early.

"I have talked to some of these criminals and they think justice as it is now is a laugh."

Bodnaruk said he expected drug-related, professional killings would increase in the future because of recent removal of the death penalty. He said Prime Minister Trudeau is partially to blame for the condition of the justice system because he helped introduce the Bail Reform Act and supported abolition of capital punishment.

"There should be some common standard of judgment — or a definite detention period. We have people coming to court charged with six or 10 offences because they came in first with one charge and then committed other crimes while awaiting trial.

"Somebody in this country has to have guts enough to say enough is enough — and start protecting the taxpayer," Bodnaruk said.

His decision to leave the RCMP followed the sex-slaying of a 16-year-old North Vancouver girl Saturday. No suspects have been arrested in the case.

Bodnaruk said he plans to take some time off before looking for a job in "the law and order or security field."

A SICK CALL FOR COMMONS

LONDON (UPI) — The Labor government drafted its sick and ailing lawmakers into Parliament Tuesday night to ensure it would not lose five critical Commons votes.

The government, which nominally has an over-all majority of two in the lower house, won all five by majorities ranging from 17 to six votes.

A first-aid station was set up in the Commons basement with a nurse on hand.

Into it were wheeled Laborites Sir Alfred Broughton, 73, suffering from respiratory trouble; Alex Lyon, 44, recovering from gall bladder surgery, and Alec Jones, 55, recovering from a recent heart attack.

Conservative Janet Fooks, suffering from mumps, sat in a car outside.

None of them actually had to vote. Their presence in the vicinity of Parliament was sufficient.

Two other sick Laborite lawmakers were unable to show up at all. William Molloy, 57, who recently underwent surgery for a kidney stone, and Frank McElhone, 47, victim of back trouble, were not allowed to leave their hospital beds.

Black Boycott Fears For Edmonton Games

EDMONTON (CP) — The Commonwealth Games federation might consider barring New Zealand from the 1978 commonwealth games in Edmonton, according to Dr. Maury van Vliet, president of the Commonwealth Games foundation.

In a telephone interview from Montreal, he said exclusing New Zealand to avoid a boycott by African and Caribbean members of the commonwealth "is the sort of thing I'll discuss with Sir Alexander (Ross, federation chairman) when I get home and things have a chance to settle down."

Dr. van Vliet said he had "casual conversations" with representatives of African nations since a Commonwealth Games meeting in Montreal last week.

"No one is in a position to make an official statement on the Commonwealth Games," he said.

"They'll have to consult with their governments when they get home."

He said Nigerian and Kenyan representatives said "they hoped to be there, but they'd have to go home and review the situation."

Jean-Claude Ganga, secretary-general of the Supreme Council for Sport in Africa, said in Montreal that Edmonton organizers can solve the problem simply by excluding New Zealand from the Commonwealth Games.

Contacted at his home in London, Eng., Sir Alexander said "It's a little early" to worry about 1978 problems now.

There is nothing in the federation constitution about contact with South Africa, he said, adding it is still too early to consider changing the constitution.

Boat Sinking Mystery—Crew

The crew of the ill-fated Hilmar B arrived today in Victoria completely baffled by the mystery sinking of their 110-foot steel hull fishboat 185 miles west of Tofino Monday.

"One moment we were cruising along real good," said the vessel's captain Jim Wylie, 38. "All of a sudden she took a list to port, rolled on its side and didn't come back."

The fishboat, built two years ago and the pride of a fleet owned by E. H. Bendiksen of Seattle, sank within 20 minutes, Wylie said.

He estimated the boat was worth $1 million.

Wylie, his nephew, Billy Wylie, 22, engineer Randy Hawkinson, 22, all from the Seattle area and crewman David Leite of Portugal, got off the stricken vessel safely and took to an eight-man inflatable liferaft after issuing a distress signal shortly after 4 p.m.

Winds were blowing steadily from the south at 25 knots and seas were running 12 to 15-foot waves at the time.

Wylie said the boat "just lay on its side and wouldn't roll back." Water poured in filling the ballast hold, the weight crushing the vessel deeper and deeper into the sea.

He said the whole thing happened "pretty quick."

Once aboard the liferaft they switched on an electronic locator transmitter which enabled the searching aircraft to home in on them.

Hawkinson said all he could think about was "first how did we get in this mess and second how are we going to get out of it with our lives."

They were spotted by a Canadian Forces Argus aircraft a few hours later, picked up by the Japanese freighter Shinyo Maru a little after 11 p.m. and transferred to HMCS Gatineau just before midnight.

The men were tired but in good shape when they left the Gatineau in Esquimalt at 8:30 a.m.

Wylie said the Hilmar B left Seattle Sunday bound for Alaska to go crab fishing. It carried a full cargo of lumber, sand, cement and other supplies for a cannery at Dutch Harbor.

A Search and Rescue spokesman speculated Tuesday the cargo might have shifted causing the boat to sink but Wylie discounted this as unlikely because the holds were fully loaded.

"There was no room for anything to shift," he said.

They said they were expecting a long ordeal and were surprised when they heard the sound of an aircraft.

They lit a flare to attract its attention, but the Argus had already spotted them.

The aircraft remained overhead illuminating the rescue area with flares until the Shinyo Maru arrived. It was about 40 miles south when the first May Day was issued and 29 miles away when the Argus spotted the men.

The 600-foot freighter cut its engines and drifted beside the liferaft. Bill Wylie clambered up a ladder, the others were hauled up by rope.

Food Market Robbed At Knife-Point

Victoria police are searching for two suspects in a knife-point robbery late Tuesday that saw $191 taken from a clerk at Grant's Food and Meat Market.

Susan Manthorpe and her 10-year-old brother were tending the family store at 1022 Cook St. when two men — one armed with a knife — demanded money.

Susan handed over the cash and the men fled.

Police said one lead they are following is the car possibly used by the robbers.

The car is described as a two-door medium-sized North American make, dark green or black and missing both hubcaps on the passenger side.

Apartment Vacancies To Increase

By AL FORREST
Times Staff

Victoria's rental housing crisis should be over within 12 months, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation spokesman Ray Pitt said today.

The vacancy rate continues to be desperately low, he said, but it has increased to 0.3 per cent from virtually nil at this time last year.

And more new apartment buildings are being started each month.

"We expect the vacancy rate to return to normal levels within a year."

The normal vacancy rate for this area is between 3 per cent and 5 per cent.

Older apartment buildings are full but there are a number of vacancies in some of the newer apartment blocks.

The present vacancy list, such as it is, is confined mainly to Esquimalt. There the rate is 0.7 per cent, compared to 0.3 per cent for Victoria City, 0.2 per cent in Saanich and 0.1 per cent in Oak Bay. The vacancy rate is virtually nil in Sidney and in the Langford-View Royal area.

The numbers refer to existing apartment blocks and do not include recently-completed buildings that are just beginning to accept tenants.

The hopeful sign is that newly completed apartments have a vacancy rate of 3.6 per cent. At the present time there are not enough of these units to ease the pressure but the construction boom of apartments will accelerate in the Victoria area during the next 12 months and the problem should be solved by mid-1977.

Much of the new construction is being assisted by CMHC and the provincial department of housing. Grants and loans are made available to builders to enable them to provide affordable rents for the first 10 years of the building.

There were 870 apartment units completed in the Victoria area during the first six months of 1976, up slightly from 834 in the first half of 1975.

The outlook is even brighter for 1977. There were 1,572 apartment units started this year, up from 716 starts in 1975, and most of these units will be completed by next summer.

Price Boot For Haircut?

Union barbers in Victoria are expected to discuss the possibility of a price hike at a meeting Thursday night.

Local president Len Fraser said there is no proposal at present for raising the price of a conventional haircut from $4, although Vancouver barbers have agreed to a 50-cent increase to $5 effective Aug. 1.

Victoria prices traditionally follow Vancouver after an interval, maintaining a differential of 25-50 cents.

Saanich Set To Get Tough

Saanich public works committee Tuesday recommended tough mandatory fines for persons convicted of violating property and land-use bylaws.

The recommendation came after development engineer J. R. Walker presented his final report to the committee on proposed changes to 20 municipal bylaws.

His report follows a study of more than three months into bylaw permit fees and fines.

The committee asked for the review in early April hoping to bring permit fees in line with actual costs to the municipality and setting fines that would provide a greater deterrence.

The committee's recommendation, if accepted by council, will mean a doubling, tripling or even quadrupling of most fines and permits in 19 of the 20 bylaws under review.

The new fines, which up to now have been left to the discretion of a judge, or were low, would range from $25 to $1,000 depending on the bylaw and number of violations.

The bylaws cover fill, swimming pool fences, signs, animals, streets and traffic, garbage, noxious weeds, control and use of parks, blasting, protection of boulevards, soil removal, protection of waterways, untidy premises, subdivision and development controls, mobile homes and trailer parks, coin operated dry cleaning establishments, and incinerators.

B.C. to Probe Firm Promoting Police Circuses

The B.C. government has jumped into an investigation started by the Ontario consumer services ministry into the operations of a California company which promotes the annual Victoria police-sponsored circus.

Consumer Services Minister Rafe Mair said he would contact Ontario officials today to find out the results of their investigation and said B.C. will launch its own proble.

The Ontario ministry last week said Gatti-Charles Production Inc. of Orange, Calif., and the Canadian Dominion Productions Inc. of Vancouver, used police and firefighters associations as fronts to raise thousands of dollars.

In a cease and desist order, the ministry said the promoters made "false, misleading and deceptive or unconscionable representations" in fund-raising campaigns.

A spokesman for the owners, promoters and sponsors of the Canadian International Circus, have denied the allegations, saying the group always has operated entirely within federal and provincial laws.

In Victoria, Douglas Richardson, president of the Victoria City Police Athletic Association, said today he was waiting until the circus committee chairman returns from holiday before starting their own investigation.

He said, however, he "may have to talk to the provincial consumer affairs people" about the matter.

Gatti-Charles has provided a circus for about the last 10 years which is sponsored by the Victoria Police Mutual Benefit Association and the police union.

Since the relationship began the association received about 20 per cent of the gross and Gatti-Charles' slice, said Richardson, was about 80 per cent. Last year the association got $14,000.

In Ontario the government order cited one case in Guelph where the police association was to receive $4,000, although $59,647 was raised.

But Howard Staats, a Brantford lawyer representing the group, said the two companies retain an independent agent to sell and distribute tickets and have no part in organizing of ticket sales either directly or indirectly.

The ministry's order said the campaigns involved tickets allegedly sold to allow underprivileged children and families to attend circuses. Large portions of the funds raised went to the promoters rather than the charities or groups involved, it said.

Mill Bay Ferry Keeps on Chugging —An Oddity Weathering the Storm

max low

I used to think it was only the English who hated to see tradition die.

But no. Right here on Vancouver Island we have a quaint old ferry to nowhere. Or rather a ferry that doesn't need to go anywhere. But it keeps right on going.

It is, of course, the Mill Bay, one of the mini members of the B.C. Ferries fleet. It crosses the sheltered stretch of seaway between Brentwood Bay on the Saanich Peninsula and Mill Bay north of Victoria.

Once upon a time, a few years back, the Mill Bay had the distinction of being the only ferry in Canada that plied between two points which could also be reached by road.

In other words: ferries are traditionally used to link islands. If you miss the boat, that's it. You're stranded. But with the good old Mill Bay ferry it isn't like that. You can turn around and drive from Brentwood up the Peninsula and over the Malahat Drive to Mill Bay. And now in Canada there are a few cross-lake ferries that share this distinction with the Mill Bay.

Of course, in the bad old horse-and-wagon days when the first ferry (then named the Cascade) started to make the crossing in 1924, getting over the Malahat was pretty grim. The road was narrow and winding and often shrouded in fog. And it wasn't made much better until late in the 1940s, so many people preferred to make the pleasant ferry crossing rather than the 40-mile detour.

Today, though, the Malahat is, comparatively, part of a super highway running Up-Island. So, really, there is no need for the little ferry. Yet it plods on regardless, an oddity, something different to take visiting friends for a ride on; another of our peculiar tourist attractions.

Over the years the Mill Bay, which replaced the Cascade (later renamed the Brentwood) in 1956, has survived attempts to get it stopped and to have it moved somewhere else. Now it has to survive the economy.

Along with all the other ferries, the Mill Bay had its rates doubled on June 1. It now costs $2.50 per car, $1 for the driver and every adult passenger, 50 cents for children and $1 for motorcycles to make the 25-minute, three-and-a-half-mile crossing. And quite a few people are realizing it's a hell of a lot cheaper to make that detour now over the Malahat.

Capacity of the Mill Bay — which sails with a four-man crew, a captain, a mate, an engineer and a seaman, is 16 to 18 cars depending on their size and how you squeeze them in.

Yet, when I made the early morning crossing from Mill Bay (8:05 a.m.) the other day, one grader and four small cars made up the total load from Brentwood. The 8:40 trip back to Mill Bay had eight cars and an ambulance.

I decided to stay aboard for a third crossing — to Brentwood again — and the 9:15 sailing had a rather incongrous load to say the least. There were two Cadillacs (one a splended 1914 model carrying Fred Bell and his wife Glenda from Ladysmith to a vintage car rally in Belligham, Wash., and the other an almost new one), a battered old truck and a boy on a bike.

"Ah, there's no class discrimination aboard the old Mill Bay," quipped bearded mate Ed Nelson as he collected the fares. He knows. He's seen all kinds of weird vehicles in his 10 years aboard the ferry.

But 10 years going too and fro is not long when you consider that captain Glen Ryder's been doing it for 20 years and engineer Wilf Hankin has had 23 years on the same crossing.

Wilf, who like Ed keeps bees as a hobby, was with the Cascade when it was called the Brentwood, helped fit the Mill Bay out in the shipyard, and has been with her ever since.

Captain Ryder, who lives on his small farm near Elk Lake, joined the Mill Bay a couple of months after it started on the run in 1956. There is a second complete crew, which I did not meet, headed by Captain Dave McGarva.

Up in the cramped wheelhouse, Capt. Ryder admitted:

"We have carried a awful lot more than this in the past." But he remains optimistic.

"We've had some overloads recently — granted, not as many as we used to have, but then everything is down on the Island," he said.

"It's a combination of many things," pointed out the Mate, "the ferry rate increase didn't help, but there are also the Olympic Games and the U.S. Bicentennial."

Anyway, things are starting to pick up again, both men insist brightly, with a belief that the old Mill Bay can once again weather the storm.

And, as you watch the little ferry putter off on another unhurried trip over the calm water . . . you kind of hope they're right.

RIPPING THROUGH wreckage is as simple as pressing a button when there's a Jaws of Life machine handy as Saanich firemen demonstrated this morning. The machine cost $8,000, half paid by the Provincial Emergency Program. Victoria fire department bought a similar unit a year ago but it has been idle since May when someone stole its engine at the scene of a fire. At left firemen Dennis Taylor, Jack Thame[illegible] and Ron Cullis attack a car simulating a rescue operation. Minutes later (right), the roof is off, peeled clean as if it were a can of beans. Breathless after Bronze finish in 400m freestyle Canada's Shannon Smith checks clock

Bronze for Smith; World Marks Fall

MONTREAL (CP) — The 21st Olympiad continued to provide world record performances in wholesale fashion Tuesday and Shannon Smith of New Westminster, B.C. captured Canada's second medal of the Games.

Smith won a bronze by clipping nearly half a second off her own Canadian record in the 400-metre freestyle. She finished third behind East Germany's Petra Thumer, who set a world record, and Shirley Babashoff of the United States.

If there was a weak spot on the potent East German girls' team, it should have been in the 400-metre freestyle.

Barbara Krause, who set the world record in the event only a month ago, was prevented by illness from competing.

But Thumer made up for her team-mate's absence, lowering Krause's world record from 4:11.69 to 4:09.89. Shannon was timed in 4:14.60 and Babashoff in 4:10.46.

Meanhwile, Nancy Garapick of Halifax, Wendy Hogg of Vancouver and Cheryl Gibson of Edmonton all qualified for tonight's 100-metre backstroke final.

"That's an historic event, Canada having three swimmers in the final," said Canadian coach Deryk Snelling. "I am very proud of our women.

"There's a tremendous amount of pressure out there. But I think our girls have handled it very well. In fact, I think it was the Americans who couldn't take it in the backstroke tonight."

Garapick won her semi-final heat in 1:03.75, the second-fastest qualifying time, after a tight race with Hogg, who finished third in 1:04.17 and East German Antje Stille, second in 1:03.94.

The fastest qualifier was highly-favored Ulrike Richter of East Germany, who won her semi-final in 1:02.39. That lowered the Olympic record of 1:03.28 set in the morning heats by Garapick.

Smith's sister Trish also will be in an Olympic final Saturday as a member of the Canadian coxless pair in rowing competition.

The other Canadian medal — also a bronze—came from the women's swimming team in Sunday's 4x100 medley relay.

World-record performances have been provided wholesale at the Games. In three days, eight of the nine events completed have produced world marks.

The American men, also unbeaten since the Games began, added two Tuesday night in the 100-metre breaststroke and 1,500 freestyle.

Olympic records hardly seemed worth mentioning. Brian Goodell, the 1,500 winner, reduced the Games mark by 18.34 seconds with his time of 15 minutes 2.40 seconds, clipping more than four seconds off his own world mark in the process.

John Hencken, who had equalled and then broken his own world breaststroke record in Monday's heats and semi-finals, chipped another half-second off it in the final, which he won in 1:03.11.

Graham Smith of Edmonton, the second-fastest semi-finalist in the breaststroke, was second halfway through the final, but finished fourth behind David Wilkie of Britain and Arvidas Iuozaytis of the Soviet Union, missing the bronze by three hundredths of a second.

The times were 1:03.43 for Wilkie, 1:04.23 for Iuozaytis and 1;04.26 for Smith.

Jennifer Chandler, who had led all the way, captured another U.S. gold in women's springboard diving, in which all three Canadian entrants failed to reach the final round.

Hans Dieter Grunke claimed another East German gold medal as he cycled to victory in the 1,000-metre time trial. He was the 1975 world champion in the event.

Jocelyn Lovell of Toronto, regarded as a medal threat in the competition, disappointed the partisan crowd by finishing 13th.

Another Canadian hope for a medal faded in the three-day trapshooting competition, won in a close finish by Don Haldeman of the U.S.

John Primrose of Edmonton, who had been second after the first day's shooting and fourth before the final round, faded to seventh place as Haldeman came from behind to edge Armando Silva Marques of Portugal by a single point.

Susan Nattrass of Hamilton, also a contender after the first day, finished in 25th place.

Nikolai Kolesnikov gave the Soviet Union its second gold medal in weightlifting in the featherweight division, upsetting the 1975 world champion, Georgi Todorov of Bulgaria.

After the competition, the Russian went on to set a world record in the jerk with a lift of 355 pounds.

Japan won its fifth consecutive Olympic title in men's team gymnastics over the Soviet Union and East Germany.

Two Canadian boxers, flyweight Ian Clyde of Montreal and featherweight Chris Ius of Vancouver, moved into the second round without striking a blow. Both had been drawn against African fighters who failed to appear because of their countries' withdrawal from the Games.

Light-flyweight Mitch Kawasaki was the only Canadian winner on the first day of competition in Greco-Roman wrestling.

The Canadian field hockey team defeated Argentina 3-1 for its first victory in Olympic competition since 1964.

The Canadian water polo team, already out of medal contention, completed its preliminary round with a 6-5 victory over Austria in another roundrobin competition to decide the bottom placings.

Japan's Win Marred By Disputes

MONTREAL (CP) — Japan, unbeaten in Olympic and world championship gymnastics team competitions since 1960, clung to its supremacy after an evening of controversial drama Tuesday.

Trailing the Soviet Union after Sunday's compulsory exercises, and without injured world champion Shigeru Kasamatsu, Japan had a tortuous struggle to win the men's gold medal with a total of 576.85 points.

Shun Fujimoto limped out of the arena with a damaged knee after the rings to reduce Japan to a minimum of five competitors.

The event was further interrupted by disagreements between officials, sustained booing and yet some amazingly agile moves by both leading teams.

The disputes over the marking began after a splendidly controlled ring routine by Sawao Kato, twice Olympic individual champion, who was awarded a mediocre 9.80 points.

The crowd jeered the marking for over a minute. Then Arthur Gander, Swiss president of the International Gymnastic Federation, walked over to the officials and spoke to the Russian judge, Leonard Asariam.

Then when Russia's European champion Nicolai Andrianov was given 9.50 points, for a high bar routine, the Russian coach, Leonid Arkaev, raced across the arena to talk to Gander.

Arkaev said later: "I felt like protesting, but I know from experience that it is no use on these occasions."

Finally after some masterly high bar exercises by Hisato Igarashi, which received 9.85 points, the Russian head judge on the apparatus, Boris Shakhlin, the former Olympic champion, had a conference of officials. But the scoring remained unaltered.

The tense situation seemed to rouse the Japanese to their finest form in the optional exercises.

East Germany won the bronze.

Canada's men did not qualify as a team for the Olympics but three made it as individuals and all missed making into the top 36 who go on to individual all-around competition.

Keith Carter of Winnipeg was 47th over all. Philip Delesalle of Victoria 50th and Pierre Leclerc of Ste. Therese, Que., 54th.

Best showing on a single apparatus was 25th on the parallel bars for Leclerc.

On the horizontal bars Delesalle was 34th, Carter 55th and Leclerc 61st, in the horse vault Carter 30th, Delesalle 37th and Leclerc 40th, on the rings Leclerc 46th, Carter 49th and Delesalle 60th, side horse Carter 61st, Delesalle 67th and Leclerc 70th and in floor exercises Carter 33rd, Delesalle 35th and Leclerc 46th.

Russian Cyclist Disqualified

MONTREAL (AP) — Klaus-Jurgen Grunke of East Germany, 1975 world champion, won the gold medal for the cycling kilometre time trial in 1:05.927 Tuesday, and the man most fancied to beat him, Eduard Rapp of the Soviet Union, was disqualified after covering a bare two metres.

Jocelyn Lovell of Toronto, the Pan-American Games gold medallist, finished a disappointing 13th.

Rapp, twice world champion and second to Grunke last year, started on the gun, then slewed round, apparently deciding he had not got away well and wanting a restart. But the rules forbid that and the Russian's appeal was thrown out.

Surprise silver medallist was 19-year-old Belgian champion Michel Vaarten, timed at 1:07.516, and bronze medallist was a three-times world champion, 29-year-old Niels Fredborg of Denmark,

Revenge Is Sweet

MONTREAL (CP) — Canada's field hockey team enjoyed the sweet taste of revenge at the Olympics Tuesday, defeating Argentina 3-1 in their first confrontation since the South Americans beat the Canadians 1-0 in the Pan-American Games final last October.

"We thought it was our turn and decided to stick it to them," said fullback Dave Bissett of Surrey, B.C. "There was great satisfaction in beating them."

Canada's victory after a 3-0 loss to Australia in its opening game in Group A competition brings it closer to its goal for the Olympics — finishing as high as eighth place. A victory over Malaysia, a team Canada has beaten in the past, would just about assure that.

"We think we can do it," said halfback Peter Motzek of Delta, B.C.

Team captain Alan Hobkirk, a Rhodes Scholar, from Vancouver, played a magnificent game, scoring the first goal at a penalty corner after 20 minutes.

Inside right Reginald Plummer of Ottawa made it 2-0 at 30 minutes when he caught a rebound off an Argentina defender's boot and flicked it into the net. Inside left Fred Hoos of Calgary made it 3-0 in the 44th minutes with a field goal before Argentina got its only goal from fullback Jorge Sabbione at a penalty corner in the 60th minute.

A ROBBERY! WHAT ELSE IS NEW?

OTTAWA (CP) — Members of the British Olympic canoeing team weren't too surprised to find that $419 had been stolen from a transport trailer they were storing their gear in while training here.

The team was also robbed last year at Belgrade during the world canoeing championships and at St. Moritz while training for the Munich Olympics in 1972.

Team manager Ron Emes said Tuesday the team was appealing to the thief to return the money.

POLICE NAB 40 SCALPERS

MONTREAL (CP) — Forty persons have been arrested since the Olympics began last weekend for selling tickets to Games events without a municipal permit, a city police spokesman said Tuesday.

The offenders will appear shortly in municipal court, the spokesman said.

City Rower Gains Semi-Final in Pairs

MONTREAL (CP) — Canada qualified two crews Tuesday — the four and the pair — for the semi-finals in men's rowing. The four placed second and the pair third.

The Canadian eight rowed a fourth, the cox pair a fourth and the quad a fifth. The eight and the quad go to the petit finals Sunday while the cox pair is eliminated.

The four and pair, in qualifying, row semi-finals Friday. There, the first three in each go to the final and the last three to the petit final.

The pair of Mike Neary of Victoria and Brian Love of Toronto rowed to qualify. Holland won in 6:55.37 with Great Britain second and Canada third in 6:56.91. Another 10 seconds was Australia, Denmark and Brazil, all eliminated.

"We only rowed to qualify," said Neary afterwards. "We played it safe. Now we're back in and looking forward to the semis."

The four is Brian Dick and Andy Vanruyven of St. Catharines, Phil Monckton of London and stroke Ian Gordon of Burnaby.

Our Gals Thumped; U.S. Men Get Scare

MONTREAL (CP) — The Canadian entry in the Olympic women's basketball tournament played a little better Tuesday morning, but still managed to lose by a lopsided score.

The Canadians, who dropped a 115-51 verdict to the Soviet Union Monday, were trounced 121-89 by Japan, the only team expected to give the Soviets much of a challenge in the first-ever Olympic women's tournament.

In other action Tuesday, the United States held off Bulgaria and posted a 95-79 victory while the Soviet women turned back Czechoslovakia 88-75.

Tonight, the unbeaten Canada men's team goes up against the Soviet Union, favored to retain the gold medal it won in Munich.

In men's play Tuesday, the United States edged Puerto Rico 95-94, Yugoslavia trimmed Czechoslovakia 99-81 and Egypt forfeited to Italy.

Butch Lee, a teenage American attending Marquette University who was bypassed by the U.S. Olympic selection committee in favor of three of his college teammates, scored 35 points for the heavy-underdog Puerto Ricans. The effort, however, fell one point short of handing the Americans only their second defeat in the 36-year basketball history of the Games.

Lee, who scored only 17 points in the Puerto Ricans' embarrassing 34-63 loss to Yugoslavia in the opening game of the tournament, played the entire way against the heavily-favored Americans and nine of his baskets gave Puerto Rico different leads over the U.S.

The Americans charged in the final five minutes when Adrian Dantley, Quinn Buckner and Phil Ford took turns scoring points and holding together the American composure in front of 4800 stunned fans.

Dantley tipped in a shot by Buckner with 33 seconds remaining and Ford was sent to the free throw line with 18 seconds left when the officials whistled an offensive charge on Lee. Ford converted both shots, but Neftali Rivera came right back down court with a drive of his own with three seconds left to pull the Puerto Ricans again within one before time ran out.

Nissalke Flays Ref's Decision

MONTREAL (UPI) — Puerto Rican basketball coach Tom Nissalke said a referee's decision to give American center Mitch Kupchak an extra free throw late in the United States' 95-94 Olympic win over Puerto Rico Tuesday was "one of the stupidest calls ever made."

With 7:46 left in the game and Puerto Rico ahead 78-73 Kupchak was fouled and awarded two free throws. After Kupchak missed his first shot, Canadian referee Al Rae said a Puerto Rican player had distracted the former University of North Carolina star and awarded him another shot. Kupchak made two free throws and cut the Puerto Rican lead to three.

"I was so stunned by the ineptness of the call, I'm not even sure what we supposedly did, and neither are our players because none of them did anything wrong," said Nissalke. "That was one of the stupidest calls ever made. It had a big effect on the outcome of the game and was just plain stupid."

B.C. Bigoted on Quebec: Lewis

VANCOUVER (CP) — David Lewis said Tuesday he finds in British Columbia a vast ignorance of the "French fact" and an "immense, bigoted intolerance" of the attempt by French-Canadians to maintain their language and culture.

In a speech, the former national New Democratic Party leader said that British Columbians tend to "blame everything on Ontario and Quebec," the power centres of Canada.

While they may criticize Ontario, he said, they don't like doing it too much because they realize that the people of Ontario speak English, just like the people of B.C. It's difficult to be too critical of people who speak the same language.

But when it comes to Quebec, the people there don't speak B.C.'s language, and when someone doesn't do that, it's all the easier to attack, he said.

Lewis, who has been a visiting professor in political science at Simon Fraser University since early July, said he has found British Columbians 'ignorant of Canada's French fact.

Not only is there an immense, bigoted intolerance of French-Canadians, he said, but French-speaking Canadians are "totally misunderstood and constantly misunderstood" by British Columbians.

What is happening, he said, is a program to make French the official language of French-speaking Canadians — not of English-speaking Canadians.

"We are not going to have a country unless we understand this," he told a service club.

Lewis, who speaks fluent French, said he has met more "non-separatist separatists" in B.C. than he has in Quebec.

House Boat Query

NORTH VANCOUVER (CP) — The National Harbors Board has launched a study into houseboats in the Deep Cove area, located on the north arm of the Burrard Inlet, after receiving complaints from several municipalities about the live-aboards.

D. A. Welsh, the North Vancouver district municipal manager, told the district council's policy and planning committee he had discussed a complaint about five houseboats at Deep Cove with the Harbors Board.

He said a Harbors Board official told him the board had received complaints from several municipalities including the district of North Vancouver and that it had set up a staff committee to study the problem.

Welsh said the five houseboats in the Deep cove area are small dwellings, built on rafts or log floats anchored off shore.

A number of other boats tied up or anchored in the cove could provide living accommodation, he said.

Fire Hazard Down

VANCOUVER (CP) — Cool, wet weather, which spread through the province overnight, has reduced the forest fire hazard, described by the forest service as moderate to high earlier this week. There were 32 fires burning throughout the province Tuesday, a fraction of the number usually burning at this time of year, a forestry spokesman said.

Two Killed

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Two persons were killed and two injured Tuesday as the result of a car-train collision about 17 miles east of this central interior community. No names were released.

Bylaw Adopted

BURNABY (CP) — Council has adopted a no-smoking bylaw for all retail stores and food outlets. Council previously voted against a no-smoking bylaw but changed their minds Monday night after hearing a report from Bud Horton, vice-president of the Chamber of Commerce and an Eaton's department store executive.

Faller Better

SURREY (CP) —Christoper Walker, 13, of Delta, who fell off the Pattullo Bridge July 14, has been listed in good condition Tuesday. He was in serious condition when admitted last week after falling 170 feet from the centre span of the bridge, which spans the Fraser River between Surrey and New Westminster.

FLOUR-PACKING CHAMP Rae Gesloges crosses the finish line with 300 pounds of flour on her packboard to win the women's division contest at the Vancouver Sea Festival. She gets help unloading her burden after completing the 25-foot course.

CHERRY CROP NEAR RECORD

KELOWNA (CP) — An almost record crop of cherries is off to a good start in British Columbia's fruit-growing Okanagan Valley, Ian Greenwood, general manager of B.C. Tree Fruits, said today.

"With a delayed season start, initial shipments to the very important eastern Canadian markets are just now reaching Toronto and Montreal. However, the reception for the fruit has been good.

Competitive marketing for cherries from Washington and Oregon is being watched closely as, with harvesting in those areas estimated to be 75 per cent completed, there are some signs of possible strengthening of their prices," he said.

Apricots, next to ripen, are expected to be shipped by the middle of this week.

Sprinklers Urged After Hotel Fires

hotel fires which occurred three days apart would have been far less serious if the hotels were equipped with complete sprinkler systems, assistant fire chief Percy Flello said today.

Officials were still trying to determine the precise causes of the two fires, one Friday night at the Sheraton-Landmark and the other early Monday morning at the Georgia Hotel, where one guest was killed and 53 other persons sent to hospitals for treatment.

He said most first-class hotels, including the Landmark and the Georgia, do not have complete sprinkers because they meet city fire safety regulations.

Flello said most downtown hotels are in the process of upgrading their sprinker systems but "it takes time."

"You can't regulate fires, you're going to have them anyway," said Flello. "But a complete sprinker system is the best thing we've found."

Fire Warden Georgie Birnie said he could not confirm without further investigation that a careless smoker started the fire that damaged the 42-storey Sheraton-Landmark Hotel.

He added it had not been definitely determined what started the blaze that killed a guest in the Hotel Georgia, Mrs. Maureen Chapman, of Port Clements.

Mrs. Chapman, wife of a Port Clements general store proprietor, was the occupant of Room 305 at the Georgia, where the fire started.

"We can't be 100 per cent sure, but the pattern of the fire within the room indicates it could only have started in the room's television set," said Birnie.

He said it was virtually impossible to pin point the cause of the fire, which destroyed the TV set.

"All we can say is that the fire's hottest point was in and around the television set . . . there were no indications it started anywhere else in the the room," he said.

Off-Duty Mountie Accused

PRINCE RUPERT (CP) — George Nylan identified RCMP constable Laurence Labrech, 23, on Tuesday as the man who "punched and kicked" him in an incident May 8 on Highway 16 about 10 miles east of here.

Labrech, on trial before Judge E. J. Cronin, is charged with assault causing bodily harm, possession of a restricted firearm, and pointing that firearm at another person.

Both Nylan, 20, and Marjorie Watts, 16, identified Labrech as the man who pointed a gun at Nylan during the argument on the highway.

Nylan said he was driving east toward Terrace just before the incident and realized he had taken the wrong road. He said he was on the point of turning around when Labrech was forced to stop behind his van.

Labrech was off duty and out of uniform at the time of the incident.

Nylan said Labrech told him he was a police officer and asked to see his drivers' licence. Later, when asked to hand over the licence, he said he refused because he wasn't sure the man was a police officer.

Nylan said the man went to his car and returned with what appeared to be a small black gun. He said the man pointed the weapon at his stomach and asked to hand over the licence again.

Nylan said the man threw the first punch, knocking him to the ground, and proceeded to punch and kick him while he remained down. He said he then left the scene abruptly and drove toward Terrace.

Nylan said there were about a dozen people at the scene, but he did not think any of them threatened Labrech.

Defence counsel Allan Hope said the witness may have been impertinent and invited a fight. He also said Nylan deliberately manoevred his van onto the road to keep people from entering an area where drag races have been occurring.

Nyland dened this and said his van stalled in the process of turning around. He said he had never been involved in drag racing but had only been invited to watch.

The trial continues.

Pacific Press Pact Seeks 16%

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Sun says 1,400 employees of Pacific Press Ltd. are to receive a pay increase of 16 per cent in the first year of a two-year contract retroactive to Oct. 31.

The agreement for Pacific Press, which publishes the Sun and the Province newspapers, was worked out under labor consultant Jim Kinnaird.

The second year of the agreement calls for an eight-per-cent hike.

In addition, the agreement allows newspaper workers to accumulate some sick leave benefits as savings and provides a vehicle for settling jurisdictional disputes stemming from automation.

This involves the appointment of a labor expert to referee internal disputes using a fairly new approach called "MED-ARB" the evening newspaper says in its Tuesday edition.

MED-ARB recognizes the need for flexibility in settling such disputes by allowing the referee to use all the techniques of mediation at the outset. If that fails, the referee can swing into binding arbitration.

Major technological change procedures have been held up at the two newspapers produced by Pacific Press while awaiting resolution of the contract dispute.

The agreement has to be taken to the federal Anti-Inflation Board for approval.

Full details of the contract are expected after the seven unions employed at Pacific Press begin ratification votes this week. The votes are expected to take a week.

Union and managment spokesmen did not comment on the report.

Unions involved are the Vancouver-New Westminster Local of the Newspaper Guild, International Stereotypers and Electrotypers Union, Printing Pressmen's Union, International Typographical Union, Lithographers' Union and the Mailers' Union, all members of the Joint Council of Newspaper Unions, and the Graphic Arts International Union, which represents photoengravers, which withdrew from the Joint Council in April over a jurisdictional dispute.

A current key pay rate at the newspapers is $320 weekly, for reporters with five years' experience.

Life, Liberty and The Hot Pursuit of Happiness

By TERRY COLEMAN
Manchester Guardian

Scene from Logan's Run . . . vision of the future?

Two hundred years ago the American rebels assembled at the Continental Congress in Philadelphia were busy ordering sheet-iron kettles for the army to be supplied at one third of a dollar each by Thomas Bates, blacksmith, and agreeing to receive leaders of the six Indian nations who begged to be allowed to call the future American president by the name of Great Tree.

And 200 years ago, after arranging for a supply of flints for the troops at New York, Congress declared that among the unalienable rights of man were life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and then passed on to hire a ship belonging to Mr. Walker.

The "resolution regarding independence," better known as the Declaration of Independence, was drafted by Thomas Jefferson. A committee hacked it about, removing the more entertaining abuse of George III, making 86 changes in all, but allowing Jefferson's "pursuit of happiness" to stand. Perhaps happiness was thought innocuous enough. But it is a phrase that has coloured the lives and expectations of every generation of Americans since. No other nation after all, has ever been promised so much.

Property First

That same year, as it happened, Samuel Johnson was telling Boswell that happiness consisted in a multiplicity of agreeable consciousness, but also that no man was ever happy except when he was drunk, not even when he was driving rapidly in a postchaise. Johnson, however, was then in his mid-60s, and a Christian, who would expect little happiness in this life. Jefferson was only 33, and, at best, a deist. He was a man of the Enlightenment. He did also pursue pleasure. On July 4, after approving his own declaration, he paid for five pairs of women's gloves.

What he had done, in part, was to adopt the theories of John Locke, but Locke had written "life, liberty, and the pursuit of property," and it was the pursuit of property, or that of property allied to happiness which was later written into the Constitution of the individual states. Pennsylvania legislated for life, liberty, property, reputation, and happiness, in that order.

The pursuit of happiness was very much an idea of the times. A poem of 1771, printed in London, bore just that title, but was sceptical of success. But this right and expectation of happiness is still deep in the mind of Americans. Everyone says: "Have a good day."

The girl who gives you a boarding pass says with sincerity to all passengers that she hopes they'll enjoy the flight, when flying to most of them is a routine to be got over with.

There is an American custom called the Happy Hour, usually two hours, from five to seven p.m., during which two cocktails are served for the price of one. There, of course, the American and the Johnsonian ideas might be thought to meet, but it won't do to say that. The American pursuit of happiness is in earnest, and the expectation of enjoyment universal and unquestioned.

The assumption is so unquestioned that hopes are raised, and promises made, where they ought not to be. I heard a Presbyterian minister, addressing his congregation, assure them: "Jesus is here and will guide your week, and will not disappoint you." Jesus, I suspect, makes no such bargain, even with Americans, even in return for good conduct. There is a constant struggle which you might call "How to be Happy though American," and happiness is achieved, if necessary, by delusion. The aged Negro leaning on a broom says he is happy where he is because things are bad everywhere, and he says that cheerfully. The bum in a New York park, not even drunk, says he has a good life. No one admits to misery, even when it is self-evident.

It is all very strange to an Englishman, who needs to have it explained, particularly nowadays, even though it was J. F. Mill, and later Bentham, both Englishmen, who held that an action was right if it tended to produce happiness.

But how, for instance, did the Jeffersonian mind jump so easily from property to happiness?

Robert J. Lifton is a Professor of Psychology at Yale, whom I found, as he admitted, pursuing happiness in his summer house at Cape Cod. He could guess, he said, that from the beginning the Founding Fathers had been prepared to demand a great deal from the cosmos, claiming a special right and promise of happiness because they were a blessed, almost chosen, people. Americans believe themselves to have been made virtuous. Until recently they had assumed and attained victory in all wars.

Can Accept Less

Such a massive expectation as happiness could only lead to disappointment, but the vision, the hope, and the freedom to demand were important. Having by habit attempted something beyond one's grasp, one could accept a little less. America had more than its fair share of the idea that desires should become reality, but again this Utopian longing had often been assuaged by more prosperity.

We talked about the American longing for political certainties, which brought us to Jimmy Carter. Professor Lifton thinks that in a way he is lucky to be standing for president in the bicentennial year, because there is a hunger for the glorious American of the past when the dream was still believable, and the fundamentalism of Carter embodied some of that past, at least before Watergate.

Professor Lifton is not sure about Carter, but fascinated by him. Carter as president might do nothing, but in a funny way that was unlikely; or he could be despotic, because there was something scary in his self-confidence, in his certainty that he was right and in his unwillingness to be crossed; or he could, having incurred few political doubts to hinder his freedom, do really innovative things. Professor Lifton rather expects a mixture of the second and third possibilities.

Now America was going to be a world power for some time, but a world power in decline, and decline was puzzling to Americans. "If you have the sense of being a blessed country, and favoured by God, when you become a world power it seems only natural and appropriate. When that's taken away the impact can be very strong. Because it's felt not to be part of the rhythm of human events. The sense of a right to happiness and success might then lead to a reaction to restore the idea of a past of perfect harmony and virtue that never was."

It was this that had happened to Germany and Italy in the twenties and thirties. But he did not want to overstate matters. The sense of unlimited possibilities was typically American and still existed: but the American Dream had never been fully an ideology.

But it had a litany, surely, of things held to be self-evident? "America has a set of visonary claims, and a litany around them, and expectations and convictions, but not an ideology in the grand manner — not like Marxism of Roman Catholicism, not with an answer for everything." The Dream might lead to hubris, and to a downfall, but there was always the imagination, the potential for change. It was clearly different from the European and Asian experience which said nothing could be done because man was man.

Robert Lifton is a writer and academic. Robert S. Folsom is mayor of Dallas. He has a dream, which is that Dallas shall be and is the city of the future. I heard him addressing an open-air meeting. He was proud, he said — at which ducks on a nearby pond quacked loudly — that Dallas was such a city. Why, the producer who had made Logan's Run, a science-fiction film, had written to say he had chosen Dallas as his location because Dallas was the city of the future. (Applause and quacks.)

The fact is, as I see it, that parts of downtown Dallas look like a bombsite, bare except for car parks. And if Dallas is the city of the future, the Lord save us from the others like it. The airport is naturally, being Texan, the largest in the world, in area, but the terminals of the different airlines are so far apart that people miss their planes. It is the most modern and the least efficient airport I have ever seen.

Anyway, after the open-air meeting, when the conversation turned to happiness, Mayor Folsom, who is in real property, first summarized for me the reasons for Britain's downfall and, then, turning to the Declaration of Independence, said: "I tell you, the pursuit of a million dollars is better than the million dollars when you get them."

I had not mentioned a million dollars; he had instinctively made the reversion from happiness to property, except that this is unfair to Locke, who saw property as the whole estate of man, and not just material things.

Mayor Folsom is white, and a self-evident ass, who is proud to have saved the wealthy citizens of Dallas a little in taxes by keeping the street lights turned off on the freeway. Mrs. Juanita Craft is black though she rejects the word, saying she is American and is a woman of shining intelligence. She too lives in Dallas, but in a district where no white lives. She says dryly that the first American blood shed in the War of Independence was that of a Negro. This is Crispus Attucks, killed in a Boston riot in 1770.

The Negroes, she says, fought for nothing and the whites for 18 dollars a week. Mrs. Craft is now 74, and can remember the time, when she was seven, when she attended a barbeque given by J. C. Maxwell for his former slaves, among them her grandfather. Her great-grandfather was sold from Virginia, away from his wife and 10 children whom he never saw again.

As to the pursuit of happiness, "beautiful words," she says. "I am disturbed by all our documents. When I read them I almost choke up, when I see our struggle. Things that are good for you are good for me. A decent house would also make me happier. We too want the niceties and not the rigors of life."

Mrs. Craft has been a widow for many years. She has supported herself by making dresses, hats, aprons, and fancy jewelry. Since the mid-thirties she has campaigned for black rights, against the Jim Crow laws which in Texas provided among other things, for the separation of black and white "in showers and coalmines" — both of these in one single statute.

Wants Niceties

She was one of the first to take part in sit-ins at diners. "We don't serve Negroes," she was told. "I don't eat Negroes either, she retorted; "I just want some food." But the fact is, however much she may choke on the constitutional documents of the United States, she is as American in her cast of thought and in her hope of turning ideas into realities as any of those white Americans who were and are prepared to demand a great deal of the cosmos. She demands, if not happiness, then the right to it. She wants the niceties of life.

When the European immigrants came in during the last century some of the more credulous really did believe that the streets of New York were paved with gold. When they got there they learned three things — first that the streets were not paved with gold; secondly, that they were not paved at all; and thirdly, that they were expected to pave them.

Jefferson liked to describe his Declaration as an expression of the mind of America. It was, of course, an expression of his own. Rationally viewed, there is no more right to happiness than there is a self-evident equality among men.

Jefferson, even though he was of Welsh descent, was a rational man of the Age of Enlightenment, who knew perfectly well that he was stating not a self-evident truth but an aspiration. He died 50 years to the day after the Declaration of Independence was proclaimed, pretty well willing himself to keep alive until that anniversary. Just before midnight on July 3, he asked, "This is the Fourth?" They were almost his last words.

Taiwan Goes About its Business

By JAY MATHEWS

TAIPEI — Next to the crumbling yellow stucco U.S. embassy here, Taiwanese workmen are busy pounding in supports for a new roadway overpass, each jarring crash a reminder that they are confidently going about their business despite the fading official American presence.

The last real panic here came four years ago when Taiwan's old friend, Richard M. Nixon, turned up in Peking to chat with its old enemy Mao Tse-tung. Many property owners here sold out fast and cheap, eager to escape before the Americans deserted them altogether, and the bottom fell out of the real estate market. Now they are back, building new roads, electric plants and two miles of high-rises on the Tunhwa Road from the airport that would rival many modern American developments.

International indignities, like humiliation last week at the Olympic Games in Moontreal, upset many Taiwanese here, although several suggest that last year's decision, since rescinded, to bar Taiwan from the Little League World Series was a greater blow. Today they are more interested in signs that Mao's health is bad, the Chinese Mainland is restless and the economy on this island is booming.

"With the food here good and plentiful," said a 40-year-old taxi driver and father of four children, "why should we worry." Since the death of Chiang Kai-shek last year one does not often hear hopes of actually recovering the Mainland lost to the Communists in 1949. But officials of the government run by Chiang's son, Premier Chiang Ching-kuo, still insist that they have more behind their new feeling of security than full rice bowls.

"We have a cause, and in that we are confident," said Ding Mou-shih, director-general of the government information office. Other officials appeared concerned that a visiting American not get the impression they felt too good about the move toward full Washington-Peking relations. "You stick around and you'll see how we sweat it out sometimes," said Jimmy Wei, director of the Central News Agency.

With only 16 million people and a volume of exports that makes up nearly 50 per cent of its Gross National Product, Taiwan is extremely susceptible to changes in the world economy. The recession dropped its growth rate from 12 to 1 per cent in 1974, but it is back now to an estimated 7 per cent, greater than predicted last year.

Per capita income is about $700, second only to Japan in Asia, and an energetic birth control program has kept population growth at less than two per cent. When thousands of factory workers were laid off during the 1974 depression, "there was a safety valve of the large and fertile agricultural sector which they went back to," said one economist.

The sound economy and Chiang Ching-Kuo's image as a down-to-earth, hardworking administrator have helped keep dissent at a minimum, Publications critical of the government are not tolerated, although the newspapers here usually report Taiwan's troubles in international bodies like the Olympics objectively. The Taiwan independence movement, the underground group opposing control of the government by the Mainland Chinese who came here in 1949, has been quiet and some native Taiwanese have won government positions.

Everything should continue to go smoothly, say a dozen diplomats, journalists, bureaucrats and businessmen here, if the anticipated normalization of relations between the United States and the People's Republic of China is, in the words of one, "handled properly."

Sun Yat-sen memorial in Taipei

What the Taiwanese say they will find hard to take is another surprise like Nixon's announcement of his trip to Peking. The Taiwanese do not fear a loss of trade; their trade with Japan, West Germany and other nations that have spurned them diplomatically has actually increased since. But they would be hurt by an abrupt U.S. cutoff of the supply of parts for military equipment purchased from U.S. contractors and the $80 million Washington is still supplying annually in long-term credits for military arms purchases.

The chance of an actual Chinese invasion of Taiwan appears unlikely to both Americans and Taiwanese here as long as Peking fears the Soviet Union and continues to give low priority to the buildup of its armed forces. According to the Institute for Strategic Studies ni London, Peking has only 46 landing craft — about the same number Taiwan has.

Foreign investors interested in Taiwan's booming economy acknowledge there will be a period of uncertaintly when the United States finally moves its embassy from here to Peking. "But next year we are increasing our investment in Taiwan by 30 per cent," said one American - in - Hong - Kong banker. "We are preparing our people to just ride it out."

Many Taiwanese hedge their bets and seek Hong Kong visas or U.S. citizenship just to have a place to go if this island doesn't ride it out. Some grumble about the government. "This is a free country," said a restaurant owner here with Hong Kong resident status and a business in Los Angeles, "but with the taxes so high I wonder which side freedom is on."

At the U.S. embassy, where such things are watched closely, there has been no significant jump in the numbers of Taiwanese seeking some way out of the country to the U.S. If anyone is going to be leaving the island, U.S. officials here think it will be them, once the election year passes and Washington can resume efforts to upgrade its ties with Peking.

"It's not too grand, and it doesn't provide much space," said one U.S. official of the ramshackle, pre-war embassy building. "But then it doesn't make much sense to fix it up, does it?"
